B.C. to Fight For Loggers

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Bennett said his government will not stand by and idly watch the loggers prosecuted.

"I can't say too strongly that this government will fight on behalf of those people asking, demanding, that the federal government drop the charges," said Bennett.

The premier's tough talk came as the International Woodworkers of America renewed threats of a province-wide walkout to protest the arrests and fisheries officers charged three more fallers.

Fisheries also moved to put a prohibited tract of timber under 24-hour guard.

The fallers, all employees of Q.C. Timber Ltd., were arrested as they cut trees in a 40-acre stand of timber that was put off-limits by fisheries about two weeks ago.

Since Monday 11 men have been arrested by fisheries officers.

Forests Minister Tom Waterland said it is "completely unfair" that loggers at the site are being arrested when there are other courses of action that could be taken.

"If they want it to come before the courts, then they should do that directly rather than through arresting individual workmen."

Ben Thompson, Vancouver-based president of the Queen Charlotte IWA local, said word of the situation is being spread to union offices around the province and the liklihood of a province-wide protest walkout is growing.

"They're flabbergasted," said Thompson when asked to describe the general reaction of IWA members.

Meanwhile, in Ottawa, Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc said that he regrets the breakdown of the consultative process that led to the arrest of the loggers.

But the minister said that when fishery and forestry experts can't resolve an issue "then I'm afraid the powers given to this department under the Fisheries Act ... have to be invoked."

Speaking from Queen Charlotte City fisheries district supervisor Kip Slater said he is hoping for reinforcements today to back up the two men now on duty.

He said a guard is being posted on the stream around the clock.

"A lot of people are saying this is a federal-provincial jurisdictional fight," said Slater. "But really it's simply fish habitat versus poor logging practices."

NHL Deal Up in Air

CHICAGO (CP) — The World Hockey Association has rejected the terms of a proposed National Hockey League expansion that would have included four of the six WHA teams but further discussions are expected next week.

Earlier reports said the NHL expansion offer had been accepted.

After meetings between officials of the two leagues broke up Friday afternoon, WHA president Howard Baldwin, rushing to catch a scheduled flight to return to Hartford, Conn., said he remained optmistic but "they've got some work to do; it's up to them."

He was referring to the NHL board of governors who voted Thursday to expand to include the WHA's Quebec Nordiques, Edmonton Oilers, Winnipeg Jets and New England Whalers.

Oscar Contest Details

Two lucky people are as good as on their way to Hollywood for an expense-paid weekend via CP Air.

The fortunate ones will be the winners of this year's Victoria Times-VI90 radio station Visit the Stars in Hollywood contest which starts today. The top prize includes two nights at a luxury hotel and a tour of the Universal Studio.

As in past years, readers who correctly predict the Oscar winners for best picture, best actress and best actor for Academy Awards night April 9 will have a chance to win the Hollywood trip or one of five runner-up prizes of a night on the town, including dinner for two at The Empress and two tickets to the Towne Cinema theatre.

In addition, there will be about 300 free movie tickets awarded to attend a Towne Cinema showing of a new George C. Scott film Movie, Movie and to watch the ceremonial drawing for the major prizes. These prizes will be announced on VI90 and the winners notified by mail.

Contestants must have the right answers to be eligible to win the grand prize or the five major runner-up awards (and they do not have to be present at the drawing to win), while everyone who enters the contest, whether they have the correct answers or not, will have a chance to win one of the 300 free theatre tickets.

The drawing for top and runner-up prizes will take place at the Towne Cinema on Wednesday, April 11, two days after Academy Awards night, at a matinee starting at 2 p.m.

The nominees are:

Cabinet Records Opened to Probe

OTTAWA (CP) — The government is giving a royal commission into RCMP wrongdoing access to records of cabinet and cabinet committee meetings, it was announced today.

An order-in-council tabled in the Commons by Solicitor-General Jean-Jacques Blais set out the rules for such access.

The royal commissioners will be allowed to read the minutes on any cabinet or cabinet committee meeting which they have reasonable and probable grounds to believe would provide evidence of unauthorized or illegal RCMP activity.

The cabinet order requires Cabinet Secretary Michael Pitfield to deliver to the royal commission any document the commissioners believe contains evidence.

However if the commissioners want to make any such document public, they must first ask Pitfield to declassify it. Such documents are usually classified as secret.

Pitfield must provide the commissioners with indexes and other information to enable them to determine what minutes of meetings they want to see.

To get minutes of meetings during the period that John Diefenbaker was prime minister, from 1957 to 1963, Diefenbaker must give permission in writing to Pitfield.

The royal commission under Mr. Justice David C. McDonald of Alberta has stumbled across some cabinet documents in RCMP files to which the commissioners have had free access.

RCMP witnesses have said that the government directed the force to investigate not only subversion but also separatism, and was aware the Mounties had to skirt the law or break it to do this.

However, the commission has been unable to get at cabinet documents that might support or oppose this view.

The commission was forced behind closed doors last November to question senior RCMP witnesses about cabinet documents because such documents had not been declassified.

The declassification process has been under way and some of these documents may be made public next week.

Hope for Stranded Ferries

$1 Million Not Enough

British Columbia Indians have balked at accepting money from the federal and provincial governments for 3,200 acres of land expropriated in 1916, a Commons committee was told Thursday. Page 11.

Wrong Man Shot?

Two men shot and killed a Belgian national bank official — perhaps the wrong man — and police speculated the Thursday night slaying was connected with the assassination of the British ambassador in the neighboring Netherlands only hours earlier. Page 29.

Vietnam Boosts Defences

Vietnam has sent 20,000 to 50,000 troops to the Chinese border area to strengthen its defences but gives no sign yet of preparations for a major attack on China, analysts here said. Page 34.

South African Prime Minister Pieter Botha hit back Thursday against allegations by Eschel Rhoodie, a major figure in the country's "slush funds" scandal, that he and other cabinet ministers were involved in the affair. Page 35.

U.S. Prices Up

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sharply higher prices for food, housing and gasoline pushed U.S. consumer prices up 1.2 per cent in February, the biggest monthly increase in inflation in 4½ years, the government said today.

18 SFU Pickets Arrested

BURNABY (CP) — Eighteen persons were arrested Thursday in a confrontation between RCMP officers and a union picket line on the road approaching Simon Fraser University in Burnaby.

A police spokesman said the 14 men and four women were taken to the RCMP detachment but were later released while police drafted charges of obstruction. The spokesman said those arrested were told to appear in provincial court April 25.

Meanwhile, Labor Minister Allan Williams said today the provincial government will not act under the terms of essential services legislation to end the labor dispute.

The minister said in an interview university services are not being disrupted to the point where government intervention is warranted.

Williams criticized John Fryer, general secretary of the B.C. Government Employees Union, for his actions Thursday which preceeded an attempt by union members to block a road leading to the university in Burnaby.

The BCGEU leader spoke around noon to a crowd of about 200 people gathered on the roadway expressing support for the union's fight.

At the end of his speech he said the only way the employees were going to win their fight was to prevent everyone from getting to the university.

Striking members of the Association of University and College Employees then linked arms and blocked incoming traffic.

Police were called and a noisy, heated confrontation ensued.

An observer said police used a loudhailer to warn the pickets to stop blocking traffic, and when that failed, the officers began charging the crowd. Some of the demonstrators put up passive resistance and were dragged off the road by the hair, he said.

The 650 union members union have been on strike for two weeks in a dispute over a new contract.

Jerusalem Blast Injures 15

Times News Services

A bomb exploded near a taxi stand in downtown Jerusalem today, shooting shrapnel through a line of waiting passengers and wounding 15 persons, including one Canadian tourist.

The explosion occurred just hours after Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin took off for the United States for Monday's signing of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Meanwhile, U.S. President Jimmy Carter, in an Egyptian TV interview screened today, warned that threats of punitive action against Egypt by Arab hardliners opposed to the treaty run contrary to the interests of the Palestinian people.

He also reiterated the U.S. would deal directly with the PLO if the latter recognized Israel's right to exist.

ESP Beats God for Believers

TORONTO (CP) — A university student doing research into superstitions and beliefs has found that more of the Metropolitan Toronto residents interviewed believe in extra-sensory perception than in God.

Laura Otis, a graduate student at York University, said the study shows 85 per cent of the 713 persons interviewed believe in ESP. Seventy-three per cent believe in God.

Persons interviewed even have stronger feelings about the Bermuda Triangle and hypnosis than the existence of God.

Miss Otis, 29, said she set out to learn in which superstitions, psychic phenomena, religious traditions and spirits people believe. She also wanted to compare views of the general public with those of university students and professors.

She found the public and students hold similar views, but that professors appear the most skeptical — only 33 per cent of them believe in ESP, compared with 80 per cent of the students and 85 per cent of the public.

Twenty-six per cent of the professors believe in God, compared with 57 per cent of the students and 73 per cent of the public. Forty-three per cent of the public believe in heaven or hell and 61 per cent believe in life after death.

"I can't say that education leads to skepticism," Miss Otis said. "But the academics were more skeptical on all 48 items."

Most credulous are English professors, Miss Otis said. The only time scientists were more credulous was when they were asked about the Loch Ness Monster and the Abominable Snowman — zoology professors are more inclined to believe these creatures really exist, the study shows.

The study of extraordinary beliefs in the community also showed that men and women are equally superstitious and that the old and young answer questions similarly.

Miss Otis said she chose commonly-known superstitions or phenomena so there would be answers to every question on the survey. Previous studies have dealt almost exclusively with students, with the aim to show that education eradicates superstitions.

Miss Otis said her survey shows almost no one believes in life on Mars, but more than half the public believes in flying saucers.

Gravy for Rich: Barrett

By PAUL NICHOLSON
Times Staff

Apart from the news that denticare is coming, Thursday's throne speech offers only programs for millionaires, says NDP leader Dave Barrett.

Speaking outside the house moments after Lieut.-Gov. Henry Bell-Irving delivered the 30-minute speech, Barrett said it contained only one positive note — the move to denticare.

That would close tha last gap in comprehensive socialized medical care in the province.

Tory leader Vic Stephens, too, lauded the denticare proposal in principle, but said he'll need to see the actual legislation to determine if it is any good.

Barrett said the most disappointing things about the speech were the gaps dealing with the serious economic problems in the province.

B.C. College of Dental Surgeons president, Dr. Donald MacFarlane said he has no way of knowing if the legislation will be based on the college's brief on denticare, but he hopes it will.

The college last year presented Health Minister Bob McClelland with a proposal to introduce denticare to the 20 per cent of the population that really needs it — the working poor and the elderly.

More than 50 per cent of the population has denticare of some kind, mostly through union contracts.

Many more are in an income bracket that can afford to pay its dental bills, so denticare is really only needed for that part of the population not already covered and that can't afford it.

Dr. MacFarlane says he anticipates no opposition from dentists similar to the protests from medical doctors that followed the introduction of province-wide medicare in B.C.

For one thing, dentists don't believe it will be nearly as comprehensive as medicare.

But if it is, the college says it will co-operate with the government in setting up the program and establishing a fee structure.

"The college has been doing a lot of work promoting a denticare program," he said. "We expect we will have the opportunity to discuss details with Mr. McClelland."

Anticipating denticare could be part of the throne speech, the college met with McClelland a few weeks ago to reaffirm its support of such a program.

Stephens said the Tory party wants to see how the program will be set up. He said he doesn't want to see the cost of the program fall on the backs of the elderly who can least afford it and who have already paid for their dental care all their lives.

Other than denticare, he said he was surprised at how short the throne speech was.

Barrett said the Socreds missed a good opportunity in the throne speech to outline what they intend to do in the area of economic development.

There are 112,000 unemployed in the province, he said, and the speech had nothing to give workers in the construction industry, who are experiencing unemployment as high as 40 per cent, any hope or comfort.

And there was no comfort for the financially hard-pressed municipalities or hospitals in the province.

"The basic problems have not been addressed in the province," Barrett said.

Other than denticare, the government promised in the throne speech to introduce a bill of rights for B.C.

It also pledged to end discrimination in the Insurance Corporation of B.C. rate structures, increased first-time home purchase grants and more financial aid for students.

More aid for the handicapped, increased assistance for business and a review of the Municipal Act were also promised.

Bay Board Rejects Bid

TORONTO (CP) — The board of directors of Hudson's Bay Co. recommended today that shareholders reject an offer by family interests of the late newspaper magnate Lord Thomson of Fleet to purchase control of the Winnipeg-based retailer.

Two investment companies owned by the Thomson family offered March 1 to buy 51 per cent of the shares of Hudson's Bay at $31 a share. The offer was worth $365.2 million.

The board's statement said that based on the assets of the company, the stock is worth at least $41 a share after taxes.

Donald S. McGiverin, president of Hudson's Bay, said at a news conference, "We have no quarrel with the Thomson family. They are sound people and we admire their taste."

The board's statement said the prospects for Hudson's Bay have improved dramatically with the recent acquisition of Simpsons Ltd. and Zeller's Ltd.

The company projected net earnings in 1979 of $70 million compared with $45 million in 1978. This will grow to $144 million by 1983, the board estimated.

The board said all but one of Hudson's Bay directors intend to retain their shares. Joseph Seagal, former owner of Zellers, intends to tender his holding of 452,177 shares.

Looking Better for Ferries

NORTH SYDNEY, N.S. (CP) — Stiffening southerly breezes gave new hope of release today to passengers stuck aboard three CN Marine Corp. ferries in an icefield barring the approaches to Sydney harbor all week.

CN Marine Corp. has seen its Cabot Strait ferry service between here and Port Aux Basques, Nfld., reduced to a shambles by persistent northerly winds that kept the ice pressed in hard against the Cape Breton shoreline and the hulls of the ferries.

Light winds out of the south early today eased the ice pressure slightly and these were forecast to increase to 20 knots later today, which would begin to move the icefield out into the 160-kilometre-wide strait.

CN Marine was forced to send food supplies, beer and spirits by helicopter to 59 passengers aboard the Sir Robert Bond, sitting just a few miles off the harbor mouth since 2 p.m. Monday on a planned run to Newfoundland. The Bond developed engine trouble while sitting in the ice and has only about 90 per cent of her normal power.

The Marine Nautica, which left Port Aux Basques Monday and has been trying ever since to get into port here, received a supply of hay by helicopter. A load of cattle aboard the Nautica were beginning to get hungry.

Meanwhile, the stern section of the wrecked tanker Kurdistan was being towed slowly toward Chedabucto Bay today, as Canadian Coast Guard and environment department experts sought to assess the extent of an oil stain found in the area.

A coast guard spokesman said Thursday the amount of Bunker C oil spilled when the Kurdistan broke in two March 19 has been revised. Initially, it was estimated that 3,500 tons was lost. New information indicates the total might be as high as 6,000 tons.

$1.1M Compensation Paid

Thirty-seven Victorians were among 451 British Columbians who received $1.1 million in payments under the Criminal Injuries Compensation Act last year.

A total of 683 applications for payment were made to the Workers' Compensation Board and 149 were disallowed.

More than $5.47 million has been paid out since 1972. The maximum award is $15,000. Compensation for death or injury is provided for in 44 specified criminal acts, and is available to persons injured when going to the assistance of police or in trying to prevent a crime.

Assaults were the basis of 217 claims. 70 involved robbery, 24 each for murder and attempted murder, and 22 the result of rape.

I Wasn't Drunk Levesque Retorts

Quebec Premier Rene Levesque denied Thursday that he was drunk during the official visit of French Premier Raymond Barre to Quebec last month. "No, I wasn't drunk but the wine was very good," Levesque quipped during a Toronto news conference following the promotion of his new book, My Quebec, at a local book store. The Quebec premier said that a toast he made during a dinner in Barre's honor was "talked about by a lot of gossipers" but that, contrary to some media reports, he was not drunk at the time.

Actress Linda Blair got a kiss from her former boyfriend before the couple entered a federal court in Jacksonville, Fla., and entered pleas of not guilty to charges of conspiracy to distribute cocaine. The 20-year-old Miss Blair and Ted Hartlett, 21, of Stamford, Conn., met outside the courtroom before their arraignment Thursday. They were released on $5,000 bail each, pending trial tentatively set for May 21. Miss Blair, of Wilton, Conn., who at age 14 starred in the movie The Exorcist, refused to talk to reporters.

Federal prosecutors were refused permission Thursday to serve appeal notice on Rolling Stone Keith Richard before the guitarist comes to Canada for a benefit concert April 22. The Crown's request to Appeal Court Justice Maurice Lacourciere was for permission to serve appeal notice on Richards' heroin-possession sentence "in whatever means or manner deemed appropriate," meaning prosecutors could have sought him out in New York or given the notice to his lawyer, Arthur Maloney. Crown officials also asked Maloney to delay the benefit concert until after an appeal of the conviction for possession of nearly an ounce of heroin. The concert for the blind is part of the sentence imposed on Richard, 34, last fall after he pleaded guilty to the charge, laid in February, 1977 when the Rolling Stones were recording an album in Toronto. Prosecutors indicated Thursday they will try to serve notice as soon as Richard arrives in Canada, although the musician has said he will make himself available to be served the day after the concert.

Black nationalist members of Rhodesia's Executive Council have agreed to award white Prime Minister Ian Smith the country's highest civilian decoration, the government disclosed today. The government said Smith would be appointed a Grand Commander of the Order of the Legion of Merit on the unanimous recommendation of the Executive Council, which met during his absence in South Africa.

When the war in Southeast Asia was in full swing, they were neighbors: Nguyen Cao Ky as vice-president of South Vietnam and Lon Nol as premier of Cambodia, both fighting losing battles against Communists. Now they're neighbors again. Lon has just moved from Hawaii to the Southern California town of Fullerton. Ky, who lives about 20 miles away in Huntington Beach and runs a liquor store, said he planned to drop by soon and renew an old friendship.

An unemployed cleaner charged with 11 counts of mischief and arson-related offences following a rash of Vancouver firebombings earlier this year has fired his legal aid lawyer. Guyla Bela Demjan, 47, had been ordered to appear in provincial court March 29 with a legal aid lawyer of his choice.

Two show business figures are on the mend from surgery. In Rochester, Minn., actor Jim Nabors is reported in satisfactory condition at the Mayo Clinic's Methodist Hospital following knee surgery. In Los Angeles, singer-songwriter Neil Diamond is also in satisfactory condition at Cedars-Sinai Medical Centre, recuperating from an operation last Friday to remove part of a spinal vertebra.

AutoWeek (April 1978)

That's quite a statement, isn't it? But then the RX-7 is quite a car. In fact, AutoWeek (April 1978) also said the performance on the RX-7 is in the same league as the costlier 280—Z, and is so quick it makes sports cars like the MGB seem positively arthritic. That goes to show you that RX-7's beauty is more than skin deep.

Speech from the throne

It's still quite possible that Premier Bill Bennett is planning a legislative session of massive giveaways, tax reductions and other "people programs" leading up to an election call within a few months or even weeks.

If that's so, however, British Columbians will have to wait at least until budget day, April 2, to find out about it. The Speech from the Throne that opened the 1979 legislative session yesterday was anything but the blueprint for an election platform.

Only two major new initiatives were contained in the speech. One is a denticare plan, designed, we are told, to "give individuals in British Columbia a measure of protection from the high costs associated with basic dental care." The other is a bill of rights that is to guarantee "fundamental freedoms to all of our citizens."

Both these initiatives are, in principle, welcome programs for British Columbians. Until more details are announced, however, it is impossible to tell whether the government's plans will meet the desired goals in either case.

Denticare is a concept that has been tossed around for years. At one point it was a top priority of the former NDP government. The NDP's idea ran into serious snags, however, both from the tremendous costs involved and from shortages of trained personnel to provide necessary services. It is to be hoped that Bennett's government has come up with answers to these problems before announcing the program in the throne speech.

A bill of rights may mean everything or nothing, depending on both the rights included in it and the system for enforcing it. The federal bill of rights, for example, has not really had much effect on the average Canadian, in part because it is subsidiary to so many other federal laws.

For the rest, the speech from the throne contained repeats of several promises the government had made earlier (ICBC will set up a new system of assessing premiums removing discrimination based on age, sex and marital status; a new wildlife management policy will be established), vague generalities (more help will be given to small business, the government will continue to work on deregulation), and a few new small expansions of people programs that couldn't possibly be controversial (more help for the handicapped, for gifted students, for children with learning disabilities).

The fact is that during the past few years the content of the speech from the throne has grown increasingly irrelevant. Some observers have gone so far as to say that any correlation between the contents of the throne speech and what actually happens during a session is purely coincidental.

At one time, the throne speech was considered an opportunity for the government to outline its legislative program for the upcoming session. Most (though never all) of the government's policies and bills were mentioned briefly. Beginning five or six years ago, however, less and less of substance was mentioned in the speech.

For one thing, governments found out that to announce a controversial bill weeks before it was actually to be debated was to give the opposition extra time to prepare and organize its protests. For another, cabinet ministers found it more comfortable not to be committed to any specific courses of action through mentioning them in the throne speech. If anything went wrong in their legislative drafting, they could just abandon a program if no one had been told about it beforehand.

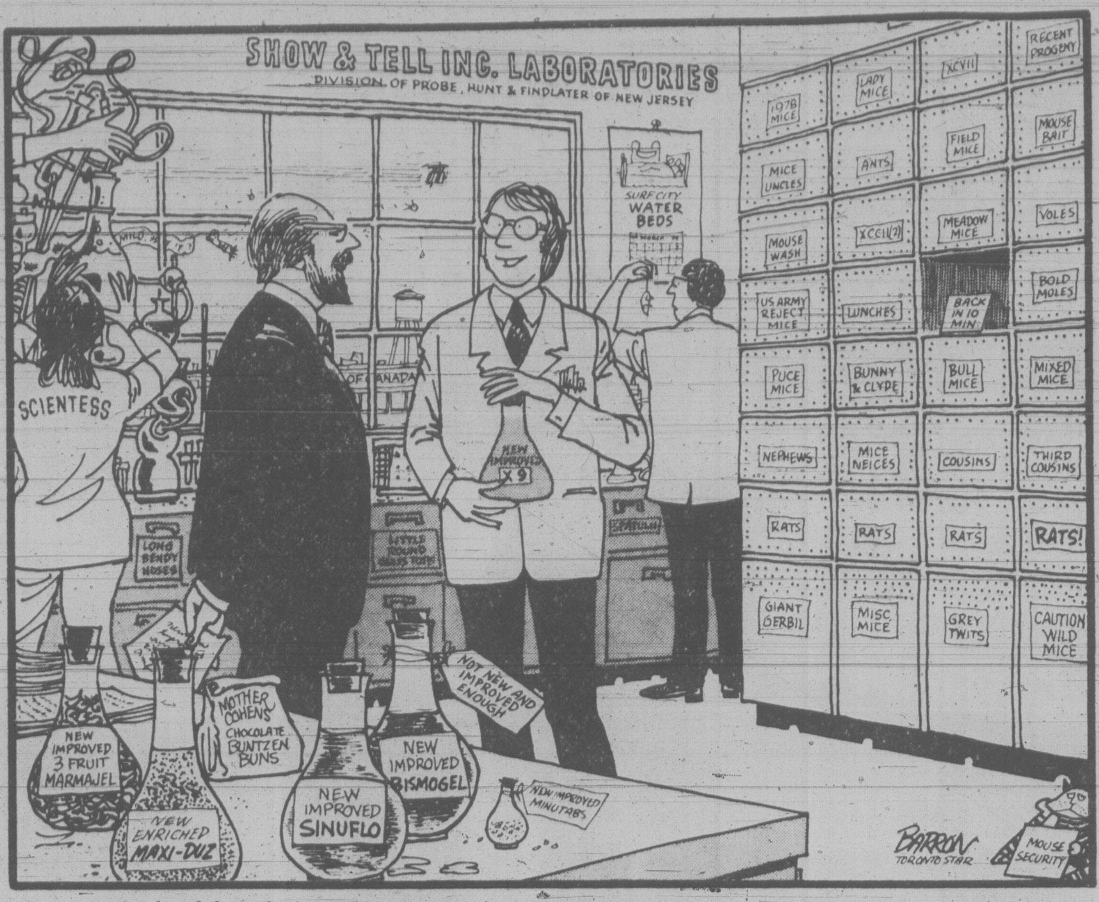
The lack of content in the speech doesn't really do any harm. It doesn't really matter that no one other than the government members themselves know the administration's plans until the last minute.

But it does mean that the House is wasting valuable time (six days of it under current rules) discussing a speech that could easily be debated in about six minutes.

It also takes away from the dignity and importance of the occasion of the opening of the House. Either the lieutenant-governor should be given a speech of substance to read or else the whole thing should be turned into a purely ceremonial occasion. (In fact, by far the most impressive part of Thursday's opening was the informal ceremony on the lawns where 2,000 schoolchildren had gathered to help mark the celebration of 1979 as Year of the Child and Family.) There should not be a pretence that a speech of substance is being read when really it is little more than eight pages of generalized and incomplete intent.

This would also mean that the first six days of the House would be put to better advantage, either in debating a speech of substance or in an immediate launching into discussion of legislation or budgetary matters.

As it is now, British Columbians will have to wait another 10 days or more before they can find out what the government's real priorities are for 1979.



"... a major breakthrough sir — this substance has no cancer-causing properties whatsover ... it's absolutely not harmful to any living organism ... can be added to any commercial product ... the possibilities are endless ..."

FRED CLEVERLEY

Man. Tory sweep shapes up

WINNIPEG — Realistically, the federal Liberal party will exceed its highest hopes if, in the next federal election, it manages to capture the same two seats in Manitoba that it did in 1974.

In that election Joe Guay, since appointed to the Senate, won the Manitoba constituency of St. Boniface and James Richardson was successful in Winnipeg South.

But Richardson has since left his cabinet post and the Liberal ranks in a dispute over the Trudeau government's bilingualism policy. Unfortunately for the Liberal party, Richardson has not decided (or at least announced) his decision to leave politics altogether. His presence in the next federal election could be a factor in robbing the party of his old seat, whether he takes it or the Conservatives are successful.

Liberal MLA running

St. Boniface was lost to the Conservatives in the byelections of last fall, and although the Liberals are talking as if they could regain it, they will now be facing an incumbent member.

To further complicate matters for Manitoba Liberals, their only provincial member, Lloyd Axworthy, has announced his intention to run federally in the old Richardson seat, and says he will resign his seat in the provincial legislature if he is picked as the Liberal candidate at a nominating meeting next week.

Axworthy is almost certain to be chosen. No one else has hinted at a desire for the Liberal nomination there. But if he is the candidate, he could find himself facing not only a strong Conservative hopeful, but possibly Richardson himself.

Richardson has called on his personal resources to further his "one Canada" movement, which is based primarily on a policy of having one national language (English) and granting federal recognition to secondary regional languages, such as French in Quebec.

Although Richardson stoutly maintains that his stand is not racist, but realistic, there is no doubt that his language policy is popular in western Canada. Whether this popularity will translate into votes remains to be seen.

It must be remembered that Richardson ran a campaign that was more independent than Liberal in 1974. His literature and billboards never mentioned the prime minister, but rather conveyed the message: "Jim Richardson speaks for the west." At one point Richardson had Trudeau's picture removed from his campaign office.

But it was an uphill fight. While Richardson racked up 8,000-vote majorities in 1968 and 1972, he won the seat by fewer than 1,200 votes in 1974, running against the man who has since become premier of Manitoba, Sterling Lyon.

Because of the close race in 1974, names of possible Conservative candidates in the riding of Winnipeg-Fort Garry (a new constituency that includes most of Winnipeg South) have been dropping like Manitoba snowflakes.

They include a cabinet minister, the former party leader Sidney Spivak who is now minister of government services, as well as Conservative backbencher Warren Steen, provincial president Inez Trueman and lawyer Frank Allen.

Spivak has laid the groundwork with the constituency organization, and is believed interested because of the possibility that, if elected in a Tory administration, he could become federal minister of justice.

Their only hope

For Manitoba Liberals, Winnipeg-Fort Garry would be crucial to party fortunes. If Axworthy wins the nomination and the seat, and if the Liberals win the election, the reward could also be a cabinet appointment, and from this, a possible re-entry into provincial politics in time to rebuild the party.

If Axworthy loses, the party is likely to be without elected representation, either federally or provincially. Manitoba Conservatives are much more confident of being able to retain any seat they lose provincially as a result of a federal nomination than the Liberals are of keeping Axworthy's Fort Rouge provincial seat.

During the Diefenbaker sweep, all Manitoba seats disappeared. The Liberals could find themselves in the same position after the next federal election is held.

RICHARD GWYN

The corporate politics of oil

OTTAWA — The politics involved in the current spat between Energy Minister Alistair Gillespie and Imperial Oil over the supply of oil from Venezuela are easy to understand, and since an election is imminent, are entirely understandable.

Less easy to understand, but far more interesting because it is the sort of subject that seldom slips out to the public's view, are the corporate politics involved in the affair between Imperial and its multinational parent, Exxon.

To deal first with the easy subject. Last month Imperial handed to Gillespie, gift-wrapped and prepaid, the kind of nationalist issue that the Liberals need to firm up Toronto the soft. Imperial, which imports almost all the oil it uses in eastern Canada from Venezuela, and which in turn buys all this oil from Exxon, announced that Exxon had cut back Imperial's allowance, initially by 25,000 to 30,000 barrels a day and subsequently by 9,000 barrels a day.

Unacceptable

Gillespie pronounced the cutback "unacceptable." Canada was being penalized by Imperial's dependence upon Exxon because, even though Venezuelan fields were in full production, Exxon had had to ration all its subsidiaries following the Iranian upheaval.

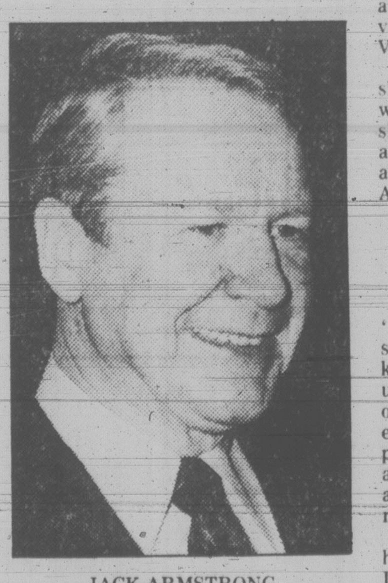
Gillespie demanded that Imperial free itself from Exxon by directly buying its own oil in Venezuela. When Imperial refused to budge, Gillespie announced that Petro-Canada, the federal energy corporation, would move in to replace Exxon as sole purchaser of Venezuelan oil, for resale to Imperial.

So far so good — for Gillespie. He is (a rarity in the cabinet) himself a nationalist by conviction. Anyway, Gillespie scarcely can lose a political battle in which he sticks it to a multinational (Exxon) while sticking up for a publicly owned agency (Petro-Canada) created to help save Canadians from freezing in the dark.

This week Imperial Oil president Jack Armstrong came before a Commons committee to tell his side of the story. He told it well. Except that he left out half the story. The half that Armstrong omitted was the interesting part.

Imperial's existing deal with Exxon, Armstrong argued, benefited Imperial, and therefore Canada, because it gave us access to Exxon's worldwide oil "pool." Canada enjoyed an "enhanced security of supply" because a shutdown in one country — Iran today, Venezuela tomorrow — could be offset by drawing upon reserves in Exxon's international pool.

Further, Armstrong revealed that Exxon sells Venezuelan oil to Imperial at the same price as it buys it. If Petro-Canada barges in, it would have to charge a commission to cover its overhead costs. Our imported oil thus would become both more expensive and less secure.



JACK ARMSTRONG
... some oily contradictions

So far so good — for Armstrong. Except that he told only half the story.

In his prepared statement, Armstrong explained to MPs that Imperial had decided to continue as Exxon's customer after its parent had given Imperial the choice to "buy oil directly from Venezuela ... [or] to continue the advantages of a pooling arrangement."

The choice offered to Imperial — in or out — seems clear-cut. Except that in the next paragraph, Armstrong added that Imperial now is testing Mexican crude in its east coast refineries and "we are prepared to deal directly with Mexico for some of our supplies."

Hold on a minute. How come Exxon will kick Imperial out of its "pool" if it buys oil directly in Venezuela but is unperturbed if Imperial does so in Mexico?

No MP asked Armstrong to explain the contradiction. So I did.

"The reason," said Armstrong after a pause, "is that Exxon has a very complex relationship with the Venezuelan government."

So what? What in Exxon's relationships in Venezuela had anything to do with whether a third party, Imperial, should or should not buy oil there, I asked. "Exxon's internal corporate affairs are its own affair, not mine," Armstrong answered.

Uh huh.

Guarantees customers

In Venezuela, it turns out, Exxon's "complex relationship" is that as a supplier of technical and managerial know-how, it functions virtually as an unofficial state oil company. As part of this relationship it guarantees Venezuela captive customers, such as Imperial. (Remember there are oil gluts as well as oil surpluses). It also earns a 21-cent-a-barrel bonus, which Imperial never sees.

Imperial's deal with Exxon thus has little to do with security of supply. Indeed, Venezuela, a stable, affluent and more or less democratic state, isn't that much less secure a souree than is Canada itself. Instead, the deal has everything to do with Exxon's internal accounting. Like all multinationals, Exxon uses subsidiaries, such as Imperial, to rearrange its profits,so that it earns the most where taxes are the least.

One last question might have occurred to you. Why would Exxon allow Imperial to buy directly in Mexico rather than, as in Venezuela, insist that it buy the oil on Imperial's behalf? Because Imperial, with its smiling Canadian face, looks better to Mexicans than does Exxon. As I told you, corporate politics are really more interesting than political politics.

Water conservation

Please, Victoria, city of gardens where I was born and raised, do not take water from the Leech River. You want the water sooner than planned and in a few years you'll want more, and then will come an extra dry year requiring more still. Salmon are struggling to live in the Sooke River and its tributaries.

We on the coast too long have taken our water supplies for granted, using and wasting as we please, thinking that water, like trees and fish, will go on forever. We can update our technology and our consciences and protect our precious lakes and watersheds.

It is high time Victoria had a sewage treatment plant providing lower cost water for farmers. Expensive? Don't worry about it. I can't afford salmon either. — Mrs. N. J. Goudie, Sooke.

Harebrained

Although the motor vehicle task force report is not yet available to the public, anything that is worthy of a headline is worthy of comment. I refer to the recent headline in the Times of March 16 — Bad Drivers Need Prison, Fines: Report. One must assume that "bad drivers" means those who drive while their licences are under suspension. Just how many of these are there? Surely not that many, and they are not really criminals, although the offence seems similar to a breach of probation.

Which brings me to the main point: in administering justice to real criminals, we have the bleeding hearts who have so messed up our justice system that hundreds, perhaps thousands, of real criminals are free to walk the streets with social workers to "help" these poor people who, as we are told, are the victims of society, and so worthy of "rehabilitation" that the system refuses to send them to jail. I am personally aware of cases in which these degenerate types are turned loose crime after crime to beat old people, steal, destroy private and public property, and to laugh at the so-called system, which they use to the ultimate in order to carry on their chosen lifestyle, which is quite foreign to that of most people.

To suggest a stiff jail sentence for these clowns is almost heresy. But, on the other hand, it is considered the answer to a problem which can't begin to approach that posed by these types when the attorney-general "really likes" the idea of locking up these vicious suspended drivers.

What does it cost to put a person in jail? Two thousand a month? Three thousand? And, as the deputy chief of Victoria's police force stated: "Where are we going to put them all?" I am certain that most accidents are not caused by drivers whose licences are suspended, but by those many licensed drivers who really don't know how to drive. We taxpayers are being ripped off by all levels of government, with their "task forces" and by the assumption by governmental officials that the tax barrel is bottomless, and the taxpayer fair game for their fantasies. This kind of nonsense must stop. It may well be that the present system of demerits is inappropriate and unworkable; perhaps it should be replaced by immediate stiff fines (i.e. money coming in instead of going out), but jail? Yet it appears (Four Get Jail For Ignoring Suspensions; Times, March 17) that the courts have already, obediently, started to lower the boom.

I am not an old crank. I am under 20; I pay an extremely high insurance premium for the privilege of driving. I have a few demerit points, but their number pales into insignificance when I note the number acquired by others. I work hard and I pay my taxes. And I object strenously to a harebrained scheme that is not, in my opinion, likely to solve the problem, but simply to present another unwarranted expense for those of us who have a responsible attitude, something that seems to be lacking in certain governmental circles. — Simon Boesgaard, 410-1039 View Street.

A bargain

As the Vancouver newspaper strike carries on, I am becoming more acutely aware of the civic scene in Victoria as presented in the daily newspapers.

As one observes the saga of the education commission being conducted by the Greater Victoria School Board under the direction of commissioner Bernard Gillie, one sees unfolding a classic case of public spending with no regard for the public's plea for financial restraint. The public has said in as many ways as it can possibly phrase it — "We want a basic education at a reasonable cost." Either the Victoria trustees cannot comprehend that statement or else they have chosen to ignore it as they embark on a costly needs study.

The full extent of the folly is yet to be known as the public is told at this initial stage that the meagre sum of $33,500 will get them a "statement of objectives." That statement should cost the Victoria taxpayers about $1,000 a word. The taxpayers of Vctoria should send back a statement of objections to the school board via the mail for 14 cents — "Stop wasting taxpayers' hard-earned money." At two cents a word it would be a bargain. — A. Leroux, Coquitlam.

Lamaline, Nfld.

Through the medium of your paper I am attempting to contact former residents or descendents of people born at Lamaline, Nfld. This would comprise the area from Point Crewe to Taylors Bay. The purpose of this request is to obtain information to assist in compiling a history of the area and its people. From research of records dating back to the early 1800s, much information has been obtained. I would now appreciate hearing from anyone with Lamaline connections who can give me any information on their family histories. The hope is that this information can then be combined with that already available. — R. H. Hillier, 25 Smallwood Drive, Mount Pearl, St. John's West, Nfld.

'Centre of world' has gone to junk

By DENNIS BARKER
Manchester Guardian

Piccadilly's Eros . . . old women in their twenties

It was "the centre of the world" but now many of the neon lights were missing like gaps in the teeth of a very old prizefighter. The American tourist mercifully interrupted as I was being dunned for money by a drug addict. "Excuse me," he said politely, "but can you direct me to Piccadilly Circus?"

"You are in it," I said. The American looked at the junkie; at the statue of Eros, with two female drunks and two Japanese leaning on it; at the missing bits from the neon lights and said: "In that case, I will have a look at that place where all the lions and fountain are. Is it Hyde Park Corner?"

I directed him to Trafalgar Square and moved off smartly. I could not blame the American for not wanting to linger. Piccadilly Circus was a depressing — indeed misleadingly over-emphatic — statement about what a civilization has come to. Measured in terms of negative publicity, it must be worth thousands of millions of pounds.

Another plan

The Central Area Planning Committee of Greater London Council last week discussed the latest plan for its redevelopment, the umpteenth in a series which previously have foundered in controversy. This one included a £40 million fun palace on the old Trocadero site.

While the Central Area Planning Committee was talking — again — I was discovering, on the spot, what it is now like in Piccadilly Circus. My vigil started at seven in the morning.

In sight there was only myself, four drunks leaning in the porch of The London Experience entertainments and shopping centre and one West Indian roadsweeper. There was plenty of work for him to do. MacDonald hamburger boxes, old drink cups and newspapers were piled up against his thrusting broom.

"I come here at six and I have usually finished my first clean by eight," he said.

The drug addicts — sadly downbeat when compared to the American servicemen and their tarts in the Circus' heyday — cast a particular depression over honest users of Piccadilly underground station. "We can't sell coffee, only cold drinks," said a trader who keeps a small sandwiches and drinks stall in the station concourse — with a plastic anti-thief shield over his sandwiches. "The London Transport police said that coffee stimulated the junkies."

By mid-morning the station had filled up like a cistern. Teenage drug addicts were by then making for the ladies lavatory in subway four to inject themselves. A newspaper seller at the entrance, who would call herself only Mary, said: "At one time it used to be the evening out to come to Piccadilly Circus. You could bring your wife here. Now you can't. Every day someone gets their purse pinched or is mugged down there.

"The hardest thing is to watch the way the girls go. I have tried to talk them out of it; but it is no use. They tell me they are not going to do it any more, and the next week they are back. Once a girl shouted across the road that she was going to kill me. I walked across to her and said: 'You can't stand up now. I have only to give you a push, and you would fall over.' She came and apologized to me. This Christmas, she died."

As the day wore on, young male homosexual prostitutes became more conspicuous than their female opposite numbers. Seldom fewer than a dozen stood between the Swan and Edgar private entrance to the Tube station and the gentleman's lavatory, while middle-aged men struck up acquaintances. It is almost a satire on what foreigners see as the British talent for self-defeat that the most conspicuous vice in Piccadilly Circus is of potential interest only to one in 20 of the male population.

Certainly, the buildings looked better after dark, even if the faces didn't. The London Pavilion with its stucco, its doric columns and its flood-lighting, looked like some royal palace.

Around six o'clock, in subway four, the drug addicts assembled for the man who would bring their fix: adolescent girls with green hair, still younger girls in ankle socks, young men with torn leather jackets and the eyes of too often beaten dogs. A young man who acted as go-between told the group: "He will only see you one at a time, right?" Ten minutes later, outside on the pavement, the freshest looking young girl of the group was screaming at the young man: "You said £2.50 for one!" while passersby stepped round them.

The surrounding area, by early evening, was full of moral casualties: frail young men with shoulder bones sticking out of tattered sweaters, their dead eyes alert for signs of interest; shrill female harridans of 16 or so; unaccountable older men with signet rings and tattoos and the aura of crookery; well dressed middle-aged men with fur hats and watery eyes and loitering feet; old women in their twenties collapsed in doorways.

Security guards stood in the entrance to the Playland Amusement arcade, like Nazis in their high-peaked caps; the police were in and out of Boots the chemists like adulterers in a French bedroom farce and British eyes were averted as much as possible. Two shopkeepers said that if drug addicts stole things it was best just to ignore them, and asked me not to quote their names. One said: "I pretend nothing is happening. That way, you stay alive."

Takeaway kebabs

Is it really as bad as that? Foreigners working in this country do not think so. Joe Cayon, delivering meat to the Coventry Street restaurant, said Piccadilly Circus had improved 80 per cent in the seven years he had been doing the job — the buildings were cleaner. Anyway, we were lucky to have old buildings. In Spain, where he came from, they cracked and disintegrated because of the heat.

It was perhaps easier, I reflected as the night wore on, to be philosophical about Piccadilly Circus if one had never known its up-beat days, when the Windmill Theatre (now doing a program called Rip-Off) was the only place in the Empire where you could respectably see naked women (provided they didn't move). "The old characters have gone," said Gordon Collins, stage doorkeeper at the Criterion Theatre. "The small shops have gone. We have got this takeaway kebab house. It looks more like a street bazaar than the centre of London."

"We get the ambulance down here two, sometimes three times a night," said a West Indian philosophically, as he swept a heap of newspapers, cartons, cigarette packets and old socks ahead of him like an obscene pram. It will take, I fear, more than yet another super fun palace to put "the centre of the world" right.

Fun and games in old Berlin

By JAMES FENTON

BERLIN — Since the broadcast of Holocaust, West Germany's neo-Nazis have been smarting from insults. It is an article of faith with these groups that the six million Jews were not gassed. On the other hand the neo-Nazis also believe that, if the Jews had been gassed, it would have been a good thing.

A recent meeting in Berlin, to discuss the Holocaust theme, was broken up by members of the Fascist group Viking Youth, who shouted: "We want concentration camps." Some Viking Youths, dressed in jackboots, black shirts and arm bands, were to be seen on Saturday night in West Berlin's Cafe des Vaterlands, a newly-opened night spot dealing in military nostalgia.

The cafe is determinedly creating a scandalous reputation. Its decor consists of sandbags and military paraphernalia, ladies' underwear and attempts at decadent art. The personnel are attired in a variety of uniforms, and to create the impression of an officers' brothel, dated 1945, women in period costumes have been hired to sit at the otherwise somewhat empty tables. The only food available is bread and dripping.

The clientele on a recent Saturday night consisted of scandalized neo-Fascists, scandalized left-wing journalists, and a few somewhat bewildered pleasure seekers in between. The left-wing journalists were scandalized by the neo-Fascists, by the tastelessness of the decor and by the attempts at entertainment, which included a striptease by an old man. The neo-Fascists were scandalized by the portraits of Hitler in the nude and on the lavatory; by the presence of the left-wing journalists; and by the general decadence exhibited by the management.

On the management side, it was the compere of the "Fraulein Vaterland" beauty contest who became most scandalized, when the old man, who had been hired through a small ad, made his naked appearance on the stage; scuffles ensued and the compere left in a flood of tears and a taxi. Meanwhile, other members of the management were eagerly pouring champagne over the naked old man.

The neo-Fascists were hanging around the entrance when our group left. They had recognized a German journalist from the Holocaust meeting, and as our group was about to get into the car, they attacked us, saying: "So you're a Holocaust type are you?" When they tried to beat up the journalist with a truncheon, an English historian ran to his rescue and was knocked to the ground by a bottle-wielding Viking Youth. He was taken to hospital and treated for cuts.

The skin of the serpent

By HENRY MITCHELL
Washington Post

Silvio Bedini was in Spain once, poking about in archives containing papers of the late C. Columbus, and these were thought so valuable that when the late Samuel Eliot Morison went there to see them, he had one awful time, and never did get very far.

But Bedini, who was then deputy director of the National Museum of History and Technology in Washington, did something or said something and first thing you know everything was flung open to his inspection.

"Well, now what exactly did you say to the librarian there?" somebody asked Bedini.

His lips sealed.

Once somebody asked me to describe the man:

"He goes about prying things loose," I said, and that's the way I still think of it.

The Columbus things — his letters to Ferdinand and Isabella, his patent to the title of Admiral of the Ocean Seas, the great map showing Isabella what she was getting in the way of new empire for her investment in Columbus' expedition — even the beautiful wrought-iron pulpit from the church where it was announced his returning ship had been sighted — all these priceless mementos were shown at the museum here.

Then there were the Leonardo anatomical drawings, mysteriously turned up, and amazingly let loose for a History and Technology showing, again with the fine hand of Bedini in the pot.

Then some months ago Bedini was poking about the Vatican.

He wound up in obscure tunnels that should not have existed, and the Lord only knows what will come of his Italian expedition. It is known that he has turned up the burial site of a famous pet elephant of one of the popes.

For my part, I would not be surprised if either the stuffed elephant of the Bernini baldachin or perhaps the dome of the basilica turned up at the museum before long.

There is, of course, that priceless collection of books that Bedini helped acquire for the Smithsonian, when other repositories seemed far likelier. And I suppose everybody knows the Bedini books on early American thinkers and tinkers, and his book on the moon (with W. Von Braun and F. Whipple), and he is going to do a book about the pope's elephant, after all, and on Thos. Jefferson.

Sometimes Bedini keeps things to himself. Down in the museum vaults he had "the shed skin of the serpent of the Garden of Eden," but in this skeptical age the museum never displayed it.

"When are you going to let me see the serpent from the Garden of Eden?" I used to ask him.

"The shed skin of the serpent?" he used to say with surprise on his face. "Why, I never knew you were interested in that. Any day. Just come on by any day and I'll show it to you."

But over the years I've never managed to see this rarity, which I think has documents attesting its authenticity — probably as good as most historical documents. After all, if we cannot be absolutely certain about the Kennedy assassination, yet manage to live with our modicums of doubt, I don't see why we should have any special problems with the shed skin of the reptile of Eve.

So I was not really surprised when somebody at the museum told me: "Silvio has written another book."

"Which one? The one about the pope's elephant or the one about Jefferson?"

The great Bedini scores another amazing coup

"Neither," said the informer. "He explains where dominoes come from."

"You mean we didn't know where dominoes come from and need to?" I inquired.

So I let it drop. Even though my wife and I in fact play dominoes. And then one day I saw the book.

"The Spotted Stones," it is called. It tells how two Italian monks on their way to a shrine far distant from their monastery were thrown into a dungeon because they might be spies.

They assumed they would be questioned and then perhaps shot because in those far-off days justice was not everywhere rampart and triumphant. But nobody questioned them because everybody forgot they had been imprisoned in the first place, and as the days wore on they almost went stir crazy.

Then the skinny monk took to digging pebbles out of the earthen floor and, after some thought and no doubt guidance, devised the great game of dominoes, and the prince (whose dungeon it was) learned to play and the monks went on with their pilgrimage.

So now we know where dominoes come from.

Bedini does not say so, but I personally believe they picked up the serpent's skin at the shrine they visited and that the name of one of them was probably Bedini. But I carry speculation no farther.

The illustrations, I could not help noticing, are flawless (drawn by Richard Erdoes) but of course graphics experts never constrict themselves in any way or pay any special attention to the text, so you will find a dandy picture of the "earthen floor" of the dungeon neatly paved with stone slabs.

There is hardly a reporter alive who has not, on some very rare occasion, allowed himself the liberty of referring to some woman as a great beauty, only to find the piece illustrated with a picture of a dromedary up close.

The book, needless to say, is utterly trifling and can be read in a few minutes and almost every page has a picture. Books should have more pictures.

Whether or not they are faithful to the "earthen floor."

I have never been able to believe people read novels. They buy them and give them to people in hospitals and jails.

If the reading time is more than 18 minutes, then I say it better be by Stendhal who, alas, is not writing any more.

Of course we have all met people who actually read Hemingway, Fitzgerald, Faulkner, Bellow, etc., and it keeps them off the streets.

But what many readers require is books of knowledge. I have sometimes wondered where mothballs come from, fascinating conglobulations of uncommon essences. And I know a fellow much burdened with administrative yokes who occasionally bursts forth when he ponders Nature: "Where do frogs come from? Tell me, sir, where do frogs come from?"

And he gets mad if you tell him.

What is needed is a series of authoritative books by somebody like Bedini, say, "Contra Lepidoptera" or "The Warted Messengers."

Other than that we don't need any more books. Too damn many as it is. If God had meant for there to be additional novels, He never would have given us Cervantes first.

Wright Takes Slap At Two Aldermen

WRIGHT

Victoria Ald. Bob Wright took a run at two of his colleagues on council Thursday for treating the technical advisory design panel (ADP) as a political body.

Without naming names Wright took a swipe at Ald. Murray Glazier and Ald. John Hayes, who both appeared at an ADP meeting last week to discuss a Wharf Street development proposed by Hans Hartwig.

The ADP is a body which advises council on the design acceptability of new projects in the city, and is supposed to be non-political.

At that meeting Hartwig stormed out in a rage and subsequently announced he was going to scrap plans for the $5.5 million waterfront building.

Hartwig has since erected a fence around the property and said it can sit vacant for 100 years.

The developer was angered because he said city hall had ensnarled him in red tape and because the ADP didn't hear from all concerned parties at its meeting.

Wright said Glazier and Hayes should have stayed away from the meeting.

"We must allow them (the panel members) freedom . . . and if the political body (council) doesn't agree with whatever recommendations the ADP comes up with then we should debate it in the political arena," said Wright.

"I would hope we'll keep the ADP as a technical body in the future and not use it as a political forum," said Wright.

Ald. Bill McElroy agreed with Wright and said that Glazier, who is now on holidays, should have his knuckles wrapped for addressing the ADP.

"I don't think it was a fair thing to do," said McElroy.

Hayes, however, defended his attendance at the ADP saying that "I attended that meeting as a member of the public."

He also said that at the meeting it had become clear to him that the ADP didn't really understand the issues under debate and he thought council should take a hard look at the panel.

He said he would initiate a discussion on the ADP at an upcoming meeting of council's group B committee.

CUPE Behind Fired Employee

SURREY (UPC) — The Canadian Union of Public Employees is ready to go to arbitration to protest against the firing of a municipal worker because he bought and sold land in his spare time, a union official said Thursday.

Engineering technician Ron Schooling was fired March 13 after 13 years' service for failing to dispose of land owned by his development company within a three-month deadline set by municipal engineer Mike Jones., he said.

"We cannot have municipal employees buying and selling land in the municipality," said Mayor Bill Vogel. "It is against policy and is a conflict of interest."

Jones' executive assistant, Graham Willis, said there was no evidence to suggest that the municipality had ever been interested in land owned by the Schooling development company.

Schooling said he had tried to comply with the ultimatum within the deadline, but had been unable to do so. He said he was asked to provide a guarantee that he would never develop any property in the municipality in future.

He described the condiion as "ridiculous."

A CUPE spokesman said a protest had been sent to municipal hall, but no meeting had been scheduled. The union was prepared to go to arbitration on the matter if it became necessary, he said.

In January, 1977, assistant municipal manager Les Harrington became the subject of an official inquiry when it was learned that he had paid $120,000 for 14.4 acres of land in Surrey six months before council approved the construction of a major sewer system in the area.

Chiefs Predict Danger In Hat Creek Project

CACHE CREEK (CP) — B.C. Hydro's Hat Creek power project in southern Interior B.C. could cause severe environmental damage, according to a study by the Union of British Columbia Indian Chiefs.

The study said damage to water and vegetation will be extensive, and there could be health hazards to people.

Steven Basil, a union field worker, said Thursday that most of the problems will stem from air pollution. The coal-fired power plant will release about 400 tons of sulphur dioxide into the air a day, Basil said.

He told a meeting of the union and the Cache Creek division of the B.C. Cattlemen's Association that contrary to Hydro reports, the environmental damage will not be confined to the immediate area of the plant, but for hundreds of miles around.

Three Killed In Car-Van Collision

VANCOUVER (CP) — Three persons were killed Thursday when a van collided with a small car at a city intersection.

Police identified the victims as Minaz Makhani, 23, of Vancouver, driver of the car, Sakarkhanu Jaffer, 57, a passenger in the car, and Richard Liang, 22, of Burnaby, driver of the van.

Federal Intrusions Top Premiers' Beef Sheet

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — The four Western premiers meet here next week for an annual event that in the past has largely amounted to a shadow-boxing exhibition put on for an absent foe — the federal government.

Recent conferences have given the premiers an opportunity to pummel federal authorities unanimously on everything from sales tax cuts and grain handling to the question of whether Ottawa or the provinces has jurisdiction over electronic ping-pong games.

It seems unlikely the 1979 version will be much different, although the host, British Columbia Premier Bill Bennett, has proposed that the provinces regard the talks as more than an annual gab-fest.

At last year's meeting in Yorkton, Sask., Bennett convinced his colleagues to set up a permanent liaison committee to follow up on the discussions and decisions taken.

When Bennett, Alberta Premier Peter Lougheed, Saskatchewan's Allan Blakeney and Manitoba's Sterling Lyon get together Monday and Tuesday at this central interior industrial city, there's little doubt the traditional Ottawa-bashing will continue.

For starters, one of the top items on the agenda is a B.C.-prepared report on federal intrusions into what the provinces feel is their jurisdiction. Last year, Rafe Mair, B.C.'s minister of intergovernmental affairs, trotted out a list of 70 alleged intrusions.

This week Bennett said he considers federal encroachments on the provincial domain of great concern, mentioning criticism levelled at Lougheed and Blakeney by Prime Minister Trudeau on the energy issue.

"The resources belong to the provincial governments and the provinces should have the control and taxation powers over them," Bennett said. "If we give up one of our resources, the others become vulnerable."

Bennett said intrusions by the federal government would not be tolerated. He added that the Western premiers' conferences were valuable because they help consolidation and co-ordination of positions for dealings with Ottawa.

The Alberta government is to present a second paper likely to fire upon the federal government. Lougheed, fresh from an overwhelming election victory last week, will deal with trade and the current international talks in Geneva.

At last year's federal-provincial economic conference in February, Lougheed criticized the federal government for failing to tell the provinces what was happening at the GATT (General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade) negotiations.

In general, the West has favored freer trade and lower tariffs, a position frequently resisted by the manufacturing heartland of Ontario and Quebec.

A paper at last year's session concluded that tariffs aimed at protection of central Canadian industry cost westerners $1 billion in 1974, or about $500 a household.

The conference began April 13, just three days after federal Finance Minister Jean Chretien brought down a budget advertising retail sales tax cuts in the nine provinces with taxes. The four premiers issued a statement that they disagreed with the way the federal government had arranged the cuts.

The separatist Parti Quebecois government in Quebec already had objected to the federally-proposed measure.

When opposition MPs raised the issue in the House of Commons, Trudeau replied that the Western premiers were trying to help Progressive Conservative Leader Joe Clark and inadvertently aiding the cause of Quebec separatism.

Not all the talk will focus on federal-provincial relations at the closed meetings, however.

Saskatchewan will present a paper on research possibilities in the West, including government policy, and Premier Lyon is to lead discussion on a Western electric power grid.

Grain handling and port development will be major subjects of concern. Bennett, Blakeney and Lyon are to tour the Prince Rupert area Wednesday to look at proposals for an expanded port there that could ship Western products to markets in Asia.

Lougheed will not join the group, but Alberta already has committed itself to lending financial support to an expansion of the northwest B.C. port.

Other subjects will be the general outlook for the economy, constitutional reform, federal referendum legislation and the report prepared by former Ontario premier John Robarts and onetime federal minister Jean-Luc Pepin on the constitution.

Indians Rally For Election

DAWSON CREEK (CP) — A spokesman for the United Native Nations said Thursday that Indians in British Columbia will take an active part in the next provincial election.

Brian Marcale said that at present most Indians in the province are not registered to vote, but the organization will travel to several native communities in the next few months and encourage Indians to register.

He said the organization also will discuss aboriginal issues with each of the provincial parties and support whichever one offers the most sound policy for native people.

The United Native Nations is asking Indians and others sympathetic to their cause to donate their five free shares in the B.C. Resources Investment Corp. to an aboriginal fund.

Maracle said the organization hopes to compile enough shares to enable it to have voting power in the corporation's affairs.

New York

NEW YORK (AP) — The stock market managed a small gain today, taking in stride the news of the sharpest rise in consumer prices in more than four years.

Gulf Oil led the active list by a wide margin, up ¼ to $27¼. Numerous large blocks of the stock, including one of one million shares, changed hands at that price.

UV Industries rose ¾ to $33⅜. A court ruled in favor of the company in one stage of its bid to ward off what it sees as a takeover effort by Sharon Steel Corp.

Montreal

MONTREAL (CP) — Prices continued gaining in moderate trading on the Montreal Stock Exchange. Inco climbed ⅛ at $24½, Gulf Oil Canada ¼ at $46½, Massey-Ferguson ¼ at $14½, Aquitaine ½ at $28¼, Brascan A three cents at $1.35, FCA International 1-5 at $3.10, Labatt A ¼ at $21¾, Shell Canada ⅛ at $19, and Stelco A ¼ at $30½. Bank of Nova Scotia dropped ¼ at $22¼, and Hudson Bay Co. ¼ at $27¼.

London

LONDON (Reuter) — The stock market was sharply higher near the close of active trading today. About an hour before the close the Financial Times index was up 15.3 at 529.9, its highest level since last September. Analysts attributed the stronger activity to hopes of an early general election. Government stocks were firm while mining shares were quietly easier.

Merger With Big U.S. Firm Makes Green Giant Jollier

WINDSOR, Ont. (CP) — With a new president, better financial performance and association with one of the biggest food companies in North America, Green Giant of Canada Ltd. seems headed for a new era of prosperity.

After a disappointing year in fiscal 1978, first-quarter profits for fiscal 1979 improved and the United States-based corporation announced a merger with Pillsbury Co.

Januschka, who had been vice-president of production for Green Giant Corp.'s U.S. operations, said in an interview that the Pillsbury merger will have no immediate effects on the Canadian operations.

But he said the recently-improved profit picture indicates a bright future for Green Giant, a contrast with doom-and-gloom utterances from other Ontario food processors who have to contend with cheap imports and high costs of labor and raw products.

Januschka said it is too early to say what changes might be made in the company's Ontario operations in Tecumseh and London or its Quebec operations in St. Remi and Ste. Marine.

The merger with Pillsbury involves a stock swap which will give Green Giant a larger financial base from which to work, Januschka said. Green Giant will operate as a wholly-owned Pillsbury subsidiary.

In line with trends throughout the Canadian food processing industry, Green Giant is putting new technology into its plants to increase efficiency and reduce labor, most of which is seasonal.

However, Januschka said no drastic employee reductions are in sight for the near future.

A surplus of canned corn in Ontario created a soft market for that product, he said. The combined effect of lower prices and sales, plus the devalued Canadian dollar, helped reduce Canadian earnings by 18 per cent in fiscal 1978.

Unit sales of canned corn, which account for one-third of all Green Giant Canadian sales, were down 16 per cent.

Import Quotas Put Shoe on Other Foot

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian shoe industry, in serious difficulty little more than a year ago because of competition from cheap imports, has shown a dramtic turnaround since the imposition of import quotas in December, 1977.

"As someone said the other day, happy days are here again," said Jean-Guy Maheu, president of the Shoe Manufacturers' Association of Canada, which lobbied hard for the quotas in face of strong opposition from importer and consumer groups.

Consumer groups and importers warned the quotas, scheduled to expire at the end of 1980, would lead to higher prices and a more limited choice of styles on store shelves. They said as well that quotas contradicted Canadian arguments for freer trade being made at current world trade talks in Geneva.

November figures from Statistics Canada show production was up 17 per cent from a year earlier to four million pairs.

In October, production was 4.7 million pairs, a whopping 51 per cent increase from 3.1 million pairs made in October, 1977, and in September it was up 34 per cent.

Maheu says that employment in the industry, located mostly in Ontario and Quebec, now is about 17,600, up from 15,000 at the end of 1977.

Idle machinery at the end of 1977 has been put back into production and the industry now is operating at close to 80 per cent capacity compared with 60 per cent a year ago.

Even exports are up, mostly for winter footwear and skates, helped largely by the lower value of the dollar which has made Canadian goods cheaper abroad.

Exports are expected to hit five million pairs in 1978, up from 3.6 million in 1977 and 2.7 million pairs in 1976.

But despite these improvements, production still has not recovered to 1976 levels of 48.6 million pairs. Total production in 1978 is expected to be about 46.5 million pairs, better than the 42.3 million produced in 1977. It is expected to hit 56 million in 1979.

Production actually dropped in the first few months of 1978 despite the quotas, as retailers used up huge inventories of imports brought in by companies anticipating the quotas, Maheu said.

Price increases, while only about eight per cent in 1978, are expected to be as much as 20 per cent in 1979 mainly because of the dramatic increase in the price of raw leather in the last year.

An Esquimalt man charged with second-degree murder was ordered released from custody Thursday by Mr. Justice Martin Taylor of B.C. Supreme Court.

George Ronald Wyatt, 42, was to report immediately to the weathership Vancouver, where he is a crewman, and to remain on the vessel which sailed this morning, until its return May 9 from Station Papa in the Pacific Ocean.

Wyatt was charged in the beating death of Charles Emmanuel John Devine, 46, also of Esquimalt, who was found dead when Esquimalt police arrived at Wyatt's apartment suite Monday morning following a call for an ambulance.

Wyatt was released in his own recognizance in the amount of $5,000 but one surety in the amount of $5,000, or two sureties totalling $5,000, must be posted on or before May 8, one day before the Vancouver is scheduled to return.

When he is not on the weathership Vancouver, he must report to a bail supervisor and he must report for his preliminary hearing in provincial court May 15.

In addition, he was ordered to have no contact with a man who will be a prosecution witness.

Before The Judge

A 29-year-old man who was denied bail last Thursday has now been released by Judge Blake Allan on $1,000 surety bail.

William David Lockhart, of 259 Obed, was ordered held in custody when he appeared before Allan a week ago charged with causing bodily harm with intent to wound, main or disfigure, pointing a firearm and possession of a dangerous weapon.

Allan said he would reconsider the question of Lockhart's release in a week.

Saanich police responded to a call March 13 in the 200-block Obed and a struggle ensued after a man stumbled out of a house, resulting in an officer's revolver being fired.

Conditions of Lockhart's release included having no firearms, ammunition or weapons, seeking psychiatric counselling and having no contact with a woman known to Lockhart.

Roy Alan Hicks, 19, of 9904 Third Street in Sidney, was handed a total of 21 days by Alder after pleading guilty to both driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 and driving while his licence was suspended.

Alder handed out a seven-day term for the first charge and a consecutive 14 days for the second.

Crown counsel N.K. Varma told the court Tennant was fined $250 on Nov. 22, 1977, when he was convicted of driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08.

Fined for drinking-driving were: Robert Owen Joseph Robinson, 20, of 3980 Panther, $400; Edward Ernest Hawkins, 18, of 1682 Bisley, $50; and Anne Marie Demas, 46, of 1345 Craigflower, $50.

In addition, Hawkins and Demas were ordered to perform 100 hours of community service work each and Demas was fined another $50 and ordered to complete an additional 50 hours of community service work after pleading guilty to refusing a breath test demanded by Saanich police.

$70,000 for Crushing

A 32-year-old Vancouver man who was crushed beneath the wheels of tractor-trailer at the North Vancouver B.C. Railway yard has been awarded $70,833 damages in B.C. Supreme Court.

Frederik Jan Meurer was awarded the sum against another Vancouver man, Bruce D. McKenzie, who was the driver.

Mr. Justice William Trainor noted that because the injuries were sustained before the Workers Compensation Act was amended to bar proceedings against fellow workers, McKenzie's initial defence on that ground was rejected in 1977 by the B.C. Court of Appeal.

He awarded a total of $94,448 for general and special damages, including wage loss of $25,000 and pain and suffering and loss of enjoyment of life of $50,000, but reduced this by 25 per cent because of Meurer's contributory negligence.

Meurer, who was represented in court by Victoria lawyer Jeff Green, was substantially injured and permanently disabled when the wheels of the vehicle driven by McKenzie passed over his body between his knees and rib cage on Aug.24, 1973.

Trainor said McKenzie became excited and in his efforts to move the tractor-trailer unit, it went over Meurer's body four times.

He has been hospitalized nine times for 172 days and had fourteen operations. There was a fracture and displacement of the pelvic bones and other injuries.

Trainor said workers were loading a series of flatcars with freight trailers to be transported by rail and from which they were taken by tractor units.

B.C. Indians Scorn $1M Offer for Land

OTTAWA (CP) — British Columbia Indians have balked at accepting money from the federal and provincial governments for 3,200 acres of land expropriated in 1916, the Commons Indian affairs committee was told Thursday.

Why?

Because the $1-million offer is based on 1916 land values, said Neil Faulkner, director-general of land claims.

"Under expropriation law and in our opinion the time of taking is the time compensation is calculated," Faulkner told Liberal MP Hugh Anderson (Comox-Alberni).

"Compensation includes the value at the time plus interest up to the date of the offer," Faulkner added.

An additional 30,000 acres of land is available for return to the Indian bands, he said.

Most of the land covered by the $1-million joint government offer is in the Okanagan Valley. A small parcel is in North Vancouver.

That land has been sold by the province to private developers and now supports orchards, housing developments, industrial parks and other small commercial projects.

Brian Hartley, the federal government's B.C. claims representative, declined comment on the current market value for the land.

"The $1-million offer is somewhat less than current market value," he said in an interview.

The joint offer is being revised but Faulkner had no further details on that or on action planned if negotiations are unsuccessful.

"I have no comment on (possible) legal action. We are considering a number of options."

Faulkner also said negotiations on the Nishga claim, which has lain dormant for the last two years, will resume shortly.

The Nishgas recently threatened an international campaign to embarrass the federal and provincial governments into settling their differences and negotiating with them.

The Nishgas were involved in a controversial Supreme Court ruling in 1973. Their attempt to get a declaratory judgment that Indian title had not been extinguished in the Nass Valley was narrowly defeated.

Convicted Doukhobors Peel Off

NELSON (CP) — Eight Sons of Freedom Doukhobors stripped naked in county court after being found guilty Thursday of attempting to burn the home of an orthodox Doukhobor sect member.

The four men and four men were joined by four or five others in the courtroom gallery as Judge Kenneth Houghton told them they would be sentenced May 4, following a pre-sentence report.

Found guilty of attempted arson were Fred M. Hadikin Sr., Fred F. Hadikin Jr. Tina Zmaeff, Pauline Hadikin, George William Kinakin, Helen Kinakin, Alex Datchkoff and Nellie Koodrin.

During the four-day trial, marked by hymn-singing and nakedness, court was told the group had approached the home of Larry Swetlikoff, an orthodox Doukhobor, in Brilliant, about 46 kilometres west of this community Dec. 21 carrying jars of gasoline and matches.

Testimony showed the group told him he must repent by burning his home and possessions. After the man refused, the group stood outside his home speaking to him.

Defence lawyer Peter Ritchie told court the group had approached several homes in the area telling them to purify themselves in the same fashion, but had not committed arson when the homeowner refused.

Chairman Re-Elected

VANCOUVER (CP) — Jim Stuart, a Kelowna alderman, has been elected by acclamation to his third term as chairman of the Municipal Finance Authority of British Columbia.

Anti-Oil Port Voices Loud at Port Angeles Hearing

PORT ANGELES, Wash. (AP) — Anti-oil port voices all but overwhelmed a hearing here over the possibility of piping Alaska crude oil from the Olympic Peninsula to Midwest states.

Eleven of the 12 persons who addressed a hearing Wednesday night sounded a single theme — no oil port at Port Angeles.

They agreed with the conclusion of a draft environmental impact statement that the so-called "Evans amendment" to the state's Coastal Zone Management Plan is unenforceable.

Sole exception was Bill Sage, Northwest regional vice-president of the Northern Tier Pipeline Co., which wants to build a pipeline from Port Angeles to Clearbrook, Minn. He said scuttling the provision could endanger that plan.

The amendment, adopted at the request of former governor Dan Evans, calls for any new oil terminal in the state to be located no farther east than Port Angeles and for it to include facilities for serving existing refineries in the state.

In 1977, Governor Dixy Lee Ray asked that the Evans amendment be dropped from the plan. The statement discussed Wednesday night was prepared by the Office of Coastal Zone Management of the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Administration to assess the effect of dropping the amendment.

Clallam County has challenged the legality of the amendment in court.

Final Chance to Go for Baroque

The concert will feature music of Georg Philipp Telemann, a prolific 18th century composer.

Better known in his lifetime than his contemporary, J.S. Bach, Telemann wrote so much music that in old age he was unable to identify his early works. Soprano Selena James will sing arias from the cantata cycle die Harmonische Gottesdieust, an extemsive series of works written for the Hamburg churches where Telemann was cantor.

Chamber duos will be played by James Kennedy, baroque flute, and SydneyHumphreys, violin; both will also play solo Fantaisies. The C Major recorder concerto, an extremely virtuosic work, will feature a string ensemble with Kennedy as solo recorder.

There will be an admission charge of $2.50 for adults and $1 for students and senior citizens.

Gardom Starts UVic Bursary

Attorney-General Garde Gardom has presented a $7,500 cheque to the University of Victoria's law faculty on behalf of the province.

The money will be used to establish the Allan Higenbottam Prize in law, for the student receiving the highest mark in a course in legislation and policy.

AirWest Contract

AirWest Airlines Ltd. employees have been awarded a contract by mediator-arbitrator John Kagel which provides for a total average wage increase of 13.8 per cent for the period from Nov. 1, 1976 to April 30 this year.

There will be an additional seven-per-cent increase May 1. The agreement expires Oct. 31, 1979.

The agreement was the first for the Teamsters Union, Local 213, which took over the certification in March, 1977 from the Canadian Brotherhood of Railway, Transport and General Workers.

The arbitration award caps a prolonged dispute which erupted in a strike by 95 AirWest pilots, mechanics and clerical employees Nov. 13, 1977. The airline was forced to operate on a reduced schedule as a result of the walkout which ended the following April when both parties agreed to some terms of the contract and referred other outstanding matters to the arbitrator.

The contract provides an average 7.4 per cent wage hike over rates paid prior to Nov. 1, 1976 and another six-per-cent boost April 26, 1978.

Sidewalk Row Splits C. Saanich Residents

Council has been asked to install cement sidwalks running from Stellys school east along Stellys Cross Road to the East Saanich Road, south on the East Saanich Road to Central Saanich road and so up to Keating Elementary School — a distance of 1.8 miles, Lamont said.

There's also the cost factor.

Brenda May, an association director, noted that in 1978 an estimate given for putting down concrete onto an existing gravel surface on Stelly's Cross Road safety walk — a distance of .6 miles — was $20,000.

"It's going to be a costly business if such programs are adopted," she said.

The public works committee will deal with the sidewalk issue at 8 p.m. Monday at the municipal hall.

Cement sidewalks are necessary in an urban area, but have no place amid the green fields of Central Saanich, half the population agrees.

The other half, however, claim cement sidewalks are essential because compacted gravel sidewalks develop mud-filled pot holes after a couple of years.

Central Saanich council has approved a cement sidewalk along Wallace Drive, to tie in Saanichton to Brentwood, but other routes are still being studied.

The issue, George Lamont, president of the Central Saanich Ratepayers Association explained, is whether to build compacted gravel walkways or cement sidewalks along some of the main rural roads.

CUPE, Teachers File Choices

Greater Victoria Teachers Association and Canadian Union of Public Employees have submitted nominations to a commission to conduct a district-wide education study.

The school board will discuss the nominations of GVTA member Ron Wickstrom and CUPE representative Fran Jamieson during a meeting Monday.

Meanwhile, Bernard Gillie, the $2,000-a-month education commissioner selected by trustees, has started work, a district spokesman said today.

Community relations officer Bill Stavdal said the board has not placed a deadline on selection of the rest of the seven-member commission.

Trustees expects the final report to be handed down by October and have allocated $33,000 for it, including Gillies $15,000 salary.

Gillie has stated the study will take at least 18 months to complete, with only an interim report ready by October. So far the board has not budgeted for any extensions.

Yet to be selected are representatives from the Victoria Chamber of Commerce, principals, students, parents and trustees.

A contract between Gillie and the district is being drawn up by the administration. Gillie is to be the only paid member of the commission.

The board has placed a moritorium on school closure until the report is completed.

The commission has access to all district files and is expected to put together a comprehensive study on existing facilities and make planning recommendations.

Wildlife Crackdown

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — Environment Minister Rafe Mair says he wants harsher penalties for persons convicted of wildlife offences.

Mair told about 160 persons at an information meeting that he will approach the attorney-general to see about harsher penalties.

Several speakers complained about lenient sentences in local courts for fish and wildlife offences, particularly a recent case where a man was fined $50 for poaching a moose out of season at night.

"It's time for the government to indicate to the bench the very serious concern the government feels toward the penalties assessed from time to time," Mair said.

Mair compared the current attitudes toward wildlife offences to the attitude toward impaired driving several years ago in the courts.

"It took Canadians a long time to change their attitudes toward impaired drivers," he said. "There isn't the social pressure on a judge to see that wildlife offences are damn serious."

Cuba Taught Charette a Lesson

MONTREAL (UPC) — Jean-Pierre Charette, portrayed as man whose illusions about socialism were cured by a 10-year exile in Cuba, will spend the weekend in jail until he is sentenced for planting three terrorist bombs a decade ago.

Charette, 36, who gave up his exile in January to return to Canada to face the charges, pleaded guilty Thursday to the bomb incidents in 1968.

Sessions Court Judge Yves Mayrand said he would impose sentence Monday on Charette, who also is wanted in the United States in the diversion to Cuba of a Miami-bound jet out of New York.

Mayrand said Charette would have to spend some time in jail although the defence asked for a suspended sentence and crown prosecutor Jean-Pierre Bonin said a four-month sentence would serve the ends of justice.

"Let us not forget these were criminal acts regardless of politics," Mayrand said.

When Charette flew back to Canada Jan. 14, Washington authorities said they would seek his extradition to the United States after disposition of charges against him here.

Both the prosecution and defense attorney Andre Williams noted that no injuries were caused by two bombs which failed to explode at two political party clubs Oct. 14, 1968, and another which did detonate at a Quebec Liquor Commission outlet Sept. 22, 1968.

Williams said at the time Charette was an intellectual working for Radio-Canada and wanted to "motivate the public for Quebec independence."

At a time of world turbulence over war and civil rights, Charette was impatient with the existing state of political affairs in Quebec, Williams said.

"Charette thought the 'quiet revolution' was all too quiet," the lawyer said, referring to the phrase often used to describe Quebec's then-evolving search for a political identity.

Charette was cured of his socialist beliefs in Cuba, Williams said.

"Charette was integrated into socialist society in Cuba and was not impressed with the lack of individual liberty there and he is now against socialism."

Since his return to Quebec, he said, Charette has concluded that "Quebec society is not endangered any longer.

"I'm sure that if our liberties were threatened again, Charette would resort to violence to defend them, as would you, your honor, or I," the attorney said.

New Booklets Of Stamps Set

OTTAWA (CP) — Two new stamps featuring the Houses of Parliament will be issued for new 50-cent vending machine booklets coming out March 28, the post office announced today.

The new booklets, which replace the 25-cent package at the same time the first-class postal rate goes up to 17 cents, — April 1 — will contain two 17-cent, one one-cent and three five-cent stamps, the post office said in a statement.

Expect Whitewash: Cossitt

OTTAWA (CP) — Conservative Tom Cossitt said Thursday an independent audit of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews' handling of government funds will be a whitewash.

"It will be a whitewash covering up errors on the part of the government of a most serious nature," Cossitt told the Commons. It also would cover up what he called bad management by former council president Peter Jones.

Cossitt repeated allegations he made last month that government grants given to the organization to promote brotherhood were used privately by council executives.

Robert Daudlin, Parliamentary secretary to State Secretary John Roberts, rejected Cossitt's "unsubstantiated, unsupported" allegations.

He said the independent audit, ordered because of Cossitt's statements in the Commons, would show all dealings between the council and Robert's department — which gave the grants — were beyond reproach.

Cossitt repeated allegations that the council gave Jones, while he was president, a $57,000 mortgage at 4.5-per-cent interest and a $9,000 interest-free loan.

He also said bonuses were paid to council directors out of government money. Last year the council received $767,000 in government grants from the states secretary's department.

Meanwhile, appearing to backtrack somewhat, Cossitt told the Commons he had never alleged that members of the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews paid kickbacks to the government to increase grants to the council.

The CP reported Feb. 27 that Cossitt told reporters that, in the words of the story, "government employees have received kickbacks to increase government grants to the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews to $767,000 from $61,000 during the last four years."

Cossitt was quoted as saying that there was "very definitely" a connection between resignations from the council and his allegations of kickbacks.

But Cossitt said Thursday CP had made an error in reporting.

The MP from Leeds said he had said that the council should welcome an audit "in view of allegations of kickbacks there were flying around Parliament Hill."

But this was far different from the "unfortunate" CP report attributed to him.

Loto Denies Pact Broken

OTTAWA (UPC) — Loto Canada officials denied Thursday the $10 lottery game has broken the provincial-federal agreement that states the federal government can spend only 50 perc ent of their gross sales on prizes.

Tory MP Perrin Beatty said this week the provinces were fuming because up to 76 per cent of the gross sales were going into prizes, taking money away from charities and the provincial games.

"We are within the guidelines," said Ian Howard, Loto Canada's vice-president of marketing. "In draw 11, we sold 4.11 million tickets and devoted 49.1 per cent of our sales to prizes. "I don't know what the figures for the next draw will be — we haven't had the draw."

Beatty produced figures that indicated up to 76 percent of the gross sales from the last draw went to possible prizes.

"Obviously if more money than should be is going into prizes then the money is not going where it is supposed to be going — to charities and amateur sport," the Tory MP said in an interview.

Last October Ottawa and the provinces agreed to divide the gambling market to give the provinces control of all $9 and under lottery games. The federal government retained control of the $10 and over games.

Refugee Procedures Change

OTTAWA (CP) — Changes in refugee application procedures that have been recently criticized as unjust were announced by the government Thursday.

However, the changes announced by Immigration Minister Bud Cullen did not include the key demand of critics — to give rejected refugee applicants a virtually automatic right to an oral appeal hearing.

Otherwise, the changes meet nearly every request made last week by a 20-member delegation of church, legal, medical, labor and humanitarian rights organization members.

The changes will require the government to tell unsuccessful applicants why they are rejected. Until now, they have not been told.

Applicants will get, within two weeks, a transcript of the statement they made to authorities in claiming refugee status.

They can correct errors or add information to the transcript which is used by a refugee advisory board to determine whether the person should be allowed to stay in Canada.

The critics say errors, omissions and faulty translations in the transcripts have been contributing to unfair treatment of applicants. Cullen promised to review translation services and to recommend improvements by the end of May.

The applicant will be able to go through the procedures at the immigration centre nearest his destination instead of having to travel back to the city where he entered Canada.

The applicant's immediate family will automatically be included in the application even if they arrive in the country at different times.

The applicant will be fully informed of how the procedures work and that he has the right to legal counsel. Procedures will be halted so he can get legal help. The government will steer applicants to legal help.

These and other changes in the system ar designed to eliminate many of the reasons the critics say confusion, hardship and unjust circumstances exist for foreigners who claim refugee status after entering Canada — usually as visitors or tourists.

The rules do not affect the thousands of refugees who apply for entry to Canada from foreign abroad.

The critics were unsuccessful in their request for a virtually automatic oral appeal hearing and a request to let foreigners apply for refugee status while they have legal temporary status such as a visitor, tourist or student.

Cullen said the right to appeal is already in the system and that the immigration appeal board, an independent court of record, has the right to give the applicant an oral hearing. He wanted no added red tape.

However, because the appeal board is not holding as many oral hearings as might be expected, the critics' comments have been sent to the board's chairman.

Cullen said that refugee applicants will continue to have to wait until they are illegally in Canada to make their claim. Letting them)pply while they are here legally would require a legislative amendment which "is not contemplated at the present."

Cullen announced the changes at a Commons immigration committee meeting.

Gun Survey Confidential: Blais

OTTAWA (FP) — Information being obtained from Canadians about the number and type of guns in their households through a telephone survey will be kept "strictly confidential," Solicitor General Jean Jacques Blais assured the Commons Thursday.

He told the House that questions about guns and other crime prevention measures taken by families were being asked to determine the impact of a media advertising campaign in reducing the crime rate.

Conservative MP Eldon Woolliams (Calgary North) wanted assurances that people who admitted to researchers they had unregistered handguns would not have their names turned over to the police to be charged under the new gun control law.

Blais said the questions about household guns and nothing to do with a separate research study into the impact of the gun control legislation, also being financed by his department.

Boycott Bill Fails To Get Unanimity

OTTAWA (CP) — A surprise attempt by the government to ram through its lingering anti-Arab boycott legislation in one day was blocked Thursday by two opposition MPs.

Edmonton Conservative William Skoreyko and Leonard Jones, an independent from Moncton, N.B., denied the unanimous consent needed for the House to waive procedural rules and speed the bill through by Thursday night.

The Conservative and New Democratic parties and, somewhat reluctantly, Social Credit had agreed to quick passage.

It now appears the anti-boycott legislation, an important issue in key Toronto ridings in the forthcoming election, may be passed next Tuesday.

The bill was introduced in a flourish of publicity last December but has been sitting neglected on the order paper since then.

The government and opposition showed renewed interest in it this week when a controversy developed over similar, but harsher legislation in Ontario.

Each side has accused the other of blocking swift passage of the bill, which would require Canadian companies doing business with Arab countries and asked to comply with an Arab boycott against Isreal to report it to the government.

Deputy Prime Minister Allan MacEachen caught the opposition off guard Thursday when he proposed that the legislation be pushed through by the end of the day.

JONES

Progressive Conservative House Leader Walter Baker had suggested minutes earlier that the bill be passed next Tuesday but went along with the surprise suggestion by MacEachen.

Asked why he had denied unanimous consent, Jones told a reporter "I'm from a railroad town but I don't agree with railroading legislation." He was miffed that no one had consulted him about the plan.

"If the bill's so important why didn't they move on it three months ago."

Skoreyko said he withheld his consent because his party intended to move amendments to the bill and would have had difficulty doing it Thursday.

Baker said in a letter to MacEachen his party wants to increase the proposed $250-a-day fines for companies complying with the boycott and to alter reporting regulations.

MacEachen said he was prepared to proceed with the bill next Tuesday and would talk with opposition leaders to see if it could be arranged.

Controversy over the issue developed this week when a Saudi Arabian official said Ontario's legislation, which prohibits compliance with the Arab boycott, was leading to tighter visa rules for businessmen travelling to his country.

Industry Minister Jack Horner stirred it up more when he said the Ontario legislation "goes much further than they intended" and was costing sales to oil-rich Saudi Arabia.

Jewish groups have said the proposed federal legislation isn't strong enough and Liberal Herb Gray (Windsor West) has been a leading spokesmen on their behalf.

Barney Danson, defence minister and only Jewish member of the cabinet, has said the federal bill is a more sensible approach than Ontario's with "more substance and less bravado."

Museum Denies 'Medalling'

OTTAWA (CP) — A London war medal dealer's complaints about medal-trading practices of the Canadian War Museum are sour grapes says a museum spokesman.

John Lormoro said Thursday that J. B. Hayward and Son's claims that the museum sold unawarded Canada General Service, Distinguished Conduct and Military Medals were "competely false.

"We trade medals with the department of veterans affairs and private collectors but we do not sell them," Lomoro said in an interview.

He said Haywards, which the museum had turned down as an auction representative, may merely be angry about having paid an unprecedented $40,000 for a group of medals won by a Canadian during the First World War.

Bit of a Boar But it Works

HAMILTON (CP) — Even pigs are getting help in the art of amour.

And in the piggery, it's not flowers, wine or perfume that's turning on the sows — it's a two-second shot from an aerosol can of boar odor.

It turns even the most tiresome boar into the Don Juan of the barnyard, says a spokesman for an Iowa company that has developed this aphrodisiac for pigs.

"Sows are attracted by the boar's smell which comes from his salivary glands," Scott Sawyers, general manager of AWC Inc., said.

"But some boars do not have a strong enough odor and they need a little help."

Sawyers said that his firm borrowed the swine turn-on idea from the British who have used it on British pigs for several years.

The aphrodisiac, known as Boar Mate, copies the scent of the boar when he propositions the sow of his choice.

But what's perfume to the pigs is a real turn-off for farmers, said Jim Field, a Port Dover, Ont., hog farmer who has used the product.

"It really has a strong smell, I can tell you that," Field said.

The product is being used by a few farmers in Canada and will be widely distributed this summer, he said.

Roblin Rips Energy Bill

ROBLIN
. . . 'whole host of products'

OTTAWA (CP) — A Conservative senator condemned the government's emergency energy bill Thursday as a Draconian measure — a sort of War Measures Act in the field of resources.

Duff Roblin, former Conservative premier of Manitoba, told the Senate the bill gives the government far more power than it needs to allocate and if necessary ration petroleum and coal in case of an energy crisis.

The bill, which was passed Wednesday by the Commons, could set aside and override a number of acts of Parliament seemingly unrelated to energy supplies, he said. These included the Bank Act and the Post Office Act.

Property and civil rights, provincial statutes, municipal regulations, private contracts and environmental protective measures could all be set aside by this legislation.

The National Energy Board would be able to do anything it wished to comply with regulations laid down by the Energy Supplies Allocation Board, Roblin said. Parliament would have to agree with only a few actions taken under this legislation.

The bill allows the government to allocate energy supplies to various sections of Canada and later to ration if necessary.

Energy supplies are defined as oil, but can be extended to gas and coal. But any item manufactured in whole or in part from these prescribed energy supplies could be included in control measures, Roblin said.

"We can envisage not just oil and natural gas coming under attention, but fertilizer, plastic or synthetic fibre manufacturers — the whole host of petrochemical products would come within the ambit of this legislation."

He said the bill grants the power "to impose rationing to all and sundry, including the ultimate consumer."

Roblin said the bill also violates a fundamental principle of parliamentary democracy: That a body to whom Parliament has delegated powers cannot give those powers to a third body.

"A delegate cannot delegate," Roblin said. But the bill allows the National Energy Board to delegate its powers to any person, body or authority.

As if that were not bad enough, the bill did not even state to whom the energy board's powers should be delegated.

World of Narnia Comes to TV

NEW YORK (AP) — As the late British writer C. S. Lewis once put it, his classic, seven-volume tales of fantasy, The Chronicles of Narnia, had their origin as "pictures in my head."

Now the keynote, beginning story, The Lion, the Witch and the Wardrobe, is going to be presented on prime-time television (CBS) April 1 and 2.

"It's great entertainment but with substance," says Caroline Rakestraw, executive director of the Episcopal Radio-TV Foundation in Atlanta, Ga., and the catalyst to the entire project.

For the first time, she says, all three segments of the industry, commercial, educational and religious, have joined forces for a prime-time presentation.

The famous fantasy adventure, which for two decades has sold at the rate of one million volumes a year in the United States, is regarded a Christian allegory of the death and resurrection of Christ.

It deals with four children in a magical land of Narnia, ruled by a wicked White Witch who has them under her spell through betrayal by one of them, Edmund. A great lion, Aslan, submits to execution to atone for the betrayal and saves them, then leaps back to life and helps them in a vast struggle to defeat the evil witch.

"There are powerful points in it if you meet it on that level," says Miss Rakestraw. "But it's also a tremendously rousing adventure story if you don't see anything else in it."

She originally had the idea for filming it 20 years ago on a trip to London to record some readings by Lewis, author of such noted works as Mere Christianity, The Problem of Pain and The Screwtape Letters.

At that time, she says he told her: "I suspect that long after I am dead, when my scholarly works are gathering dust, I'll be remembered only for Narnia."

After he died in 1963, the Episcopal Radio-TV Foundation acquired worldwide film rights to the tales. Then, in partnership with the Children's Television Workshop which produced Sesame Street, began arrangements with Kraft Inc. to underwrite and sponsor the lion-witch production.

Kraft, headed by William Beers, an Episcopalian and member of the Church of the Holy Comforter in Kenilworth, Ill., committed $3.2 million to the project.

The animation for it was done by Bill Melendez, known for his work for the Charlie Brown Peanuts TV specials. Of the new Narnia show, he says it "has a lot of message" but also is lively "rough and tumble" entertainment.

Singer Backs Michelle Case

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — A nightclub singer and a onetime Playboy Club bunny described Michelle Marvin's singing as "one of the better acts," but said actor Lee Marvin waved his arms around "like a gorilla" and put her under strain while she performed.

Mrs. Doris Brenman, an attorney and former Playboy Club bunny in Phoenix, Ariz., was called Thursday in the Marvin property-settlement trial to verify that Miss Marvin worked in the club for two weeks in 1964.

Mrs. Brenman said Miss Marvin, then a singer, entertained at the club in late 1964 and described her as "one of the better acts."

Earlier Thursday, night club singer Patti Casey appeared voluntarily, she said, to impeach the testimony of defence witness Wally George, a radio and television producer.

George had testified that Miss Marvin had secured an engagement at Holiday House in Malibu in 1965 only because of her association with Marvin. He said also that Miss Marvin's singing ability was only adequate.

Miss Casey, former wife of the nightclub owner, said Miss Marvin was a good entertainer. "She held the house," she said. "They were attentive while she was singing."

Miss Casey also testified that Marvin was frequently drunk and boisterous in the bar while Miss Marvin was singing and put the singer under a strain.

Youngest Barrymore Makes Mark

Scott's World

By VERNON SCOTT
United Press International

HOLLYWOOD — Youngest of the oldest, most-respected acting family in the United States is Drew Barrymore, four-year-old granddaughter of the late John Barrymore.

She is also a grandniece of Lionel and Ethel and kin to the distinguished Drew family of actors. She's heir to a theatrical heritage like none other in North America.

Little Drew is blonde and startlingly, cherubically beautiful. She is also the daughter of John Drew Barrymore, 47-year-old son of the "Great Profile", and Ildiko Jaid.

Miss Jaid, 27, an actress and dancer, lives with little Drew in a modest two-bedroom duplex in a decaying area of Hollywood, not far from where Drew's father lives. His visits are infrequent.

Drew's mother's curious name is partly fabricated. She was born in Germany of Hungarian parents.

Like thousands of other attractive young women, Ildiko migrated to Hollywood to seek fame and fortune at age 19. She found neither. But shortly after arriving she met and fell in love with Barrymore.

Their relationship endured, off and on, stormily for five years, three of which were spent living together as man and wife. Their parting was Ildiko's idea. She did not want to rear little Drew in the lifestyle to which the child's father was accustomed.

"I have been the sole support of Drew since she was born," said Ildiko, a dark-haired, dark-eyed, slender young woman who gives the impression of having a level head on her shoulders and whose primary concern in life now is Drew.

Drew has done five TV commercials, four in the past month, and in each case won the job after a brief test. She also appeared as a little boy in the TV movie Suddenly Love with Cindy Williams.

Ildiko has worked as a day player in movies and TV shows. She's done many commercials and works as a waitress and script proofreader when money gets scarce. She and Drew both take dance lessons.

Mother and daughter are close companions. Drew, in addition to her startling facial beauty, is a precocious child, bright, sunny and inquisitive. And, true to family tradition, she is something of a ham.

"I had no idea of involving Drew in show business," Ildiko said. "But, when she was 11 months old, a friend sent a picture of her to an agent who insisted she try out for a dog food commercial.

"I fought the idea but finally gave in. We arrived with 90 other babies. When it was Drew's turn, the puppy bit her on the nose. Drew threw back her head and laughed and got the commerical on the spot.

"I let her career go at that for a couple of years, then a director friend of mine, Stuart Margolin, who knows Drew, asked to use her in Suddenly Love.

"Drew is a natural actress. She loves the attention, the atmosphere and the camera. As soon as the director says 'action,' Drew lights up and is ready to do anything the director tells her.

"I don't know if theatrical talent is a genetic thing. It would be conjecture for me to say. But she has all the right instincts."

Percussion Beat Goes On

Music from Africa, Brazil, Egypt, Asia, Canada and the U.S. will be performed by an ensemble of percussion students from University of Victoria's School of Music, Saturday at 8 p.m. It takes place in the music building recital hall and is free and open to the public.

Many interesting and unusual instruments will be used for the fascinating program. The ensemble will be conducted by Scott Eddlemon, percussion instructor at the School of Music. Featured soloist is student Barbara Callaghan performing a concerto for roto toms and percussion quartet.

Included in the program is an African piece entitled African Welcome, which makes use of such unusual instrumentation as a bull roarer and spagane. There will also be a world premiere of a new composition, Psaume Cent Trente-Trois. This piece is the composition of graduate student Janet Danielson.

Midnight Express and Heaven Can Wait.

Best Actress — Jill Clayburgh for An Unmarried Woman, Ingrid Bergman for Autumn Sonata, Ellen Burstyn for Same Time, Next Year, Jane Fonda for Coming Home and Geraldine Page for Interiors.

A Vietnam war tale, The Deerhunter, and a comedy, Heaven Can Wait, each received nine nominations, while Coming Home had eight, Midnight Express had six and Interiors (which was not nominated as best picture) came next with five nominations.

As usual, the Oscar race is a bit of a guessing contest because things like sentiment and studio politics plays as much of a role as talent.

The Deerhunter has been praised by many critics while Heaven Can Wait was a big hit at the box office.

Louie the Greek passes along the inside information that Academy voters, in suggesting what films should be nominated, mentioned Coming Home and Heaven Can Wait most frequently. Such information, while not conclusive, gives an indication of the early betting line, he says.

It is also significant, he says, that An Unmarried Woman was nominated for best movie, but not best director, which makes it a longshot to win the Oscar for best movie.

The contest requires readers to pick only the three winners: best movie, best actor and best actress.

Supporting Actress — Maggie Smith for California Suite, Dyan Cannon for Heaven Can Wait, Penelope Milford for Coming Home, Maureen Stapleton for Interiors and Meryl Streep for The Deerhunter.

Director — Woody Allen for Interiors, Hal Ashby for Coming Home, Michael Cimino for The Deerhunter, Warren Beatty and Buck Henry for Heaven Can Wait and Alan Parker for Midnight Express.

Original Song — Hopelessly Devoted to You from Grease, Last Dance from Thank God It's Friday, The Last Time I Felt Like This from Same Time, Next Year, Ready to Take a Chance Again from Foul Play and When You're Loved from The Magic of Lassie.

That CPR Course A Real Lifesaver

An elderly Saanich man died twice in minutes during one December day and is only alive now because of the efforts of two passing motorists.

On Dec. 11, David Thom, 74, of 3750 Carey Road, was walking across Douglas Street at Ravine Way when he collapsed in the centre of the road.

Fortunately for Thom, Trevor Bedea and Al Ingeber, both of Sooke, were driving in their truck and saw him fall.

A safety technician, Bedea had served a five-year stint with the Canadian navy and during that time had taken an industrial first aid course.

He realized that Thom had had a cardiac arrest. "He died standing on his feet," Bedea told the Times this week.

Also driving north at the time was Greg Martell of 4127 Birtles, who was an orderly at the Royal Jubilee Hospital for 14 years and is now with the hospital's building services department.

He, too, stopped to help Thom. The two men worked together, using the skills and knowledge which Martell had gained last April when he took a CPR (Cardiopulmonary Resuscitiation) course at the Saanich firehall on Vernon Avenue.

"I took the CPR course last April and six months later this happened," Martell told the Times, as he sat taking the recommended annual refresher course at the firehall.

Before the Emergency Health Services ambulance had arrived Thom had a second cardiac arrest but, working as a team, Martell and Bedea were able to hand over Thom unconscious but alive.

Enjoying a quiet tea hour in their home this week, Thom and his wife Pat were grateful for the life-saving actions of two men they have never seen.

"The last thing I knew I was in the hospital," Thom said. "It's pretty wonderful that there are people who can do this and take care of you."

Mrs. Thom said she was particularly grateful and impressed because of the growing tendency in society for people to mind their own business.

Saanich firefighter Neil Duckworth, however, says more and more people are taking the CPR course in order to be able to help others in case of emergency.

Duckworth is co-ordinator and instructor for the CPR course which is part of the required training for Saanich firefighters. This is the second year it has been available to the general public.

About 700 people from all walks of life —housewives, dentists, college students and others — have taken the 3½-hour course since it has been available.

The course begins with a 30-minute film, made by the American Heart Association. Duckworth explains that Canada and the United States use the same methods to help ensure co-ordination of emergency treatment for people on the North American continent.

The film outlines the techniques, after which the students practise those techniques on dummies until they have mastered them. The course ends with a 40-question written examination.

By phoning Duckworth at the firehall —388-5531— applicants can be fitted into courses at times that will be suitable.

The latest crop of students had an extra bonus when Martell and Bedea joined them to show how it had helped them to become Good Samaritans.

TOWN TALK

Did somebody goof or was it deliberate that Liberal leader Jev Tothill didn't get an invitation to sit as a special guest on the floor of the legislature at Thursday's opening?

Granted Tothill isn't an MLA but he's a party leader — and as such represents a considerable number of British Columbians — who'll be running in the May 31 byelection in North Vancouver-Seymour.

Looking down on the floor you could see the old familar faces — the business types, the Socred allies and big labor representatives.

But no Tothill. He wound up watching from the public gallery and Town Talk is told, was lucky to even get in there.

We say chintzy, chintzy.

Ever since he returned from a recent holiday to China Victoria Ald. Bob Wright has been something of an expert on that country. He flaunted his knowledge once again at Thursday night's council meeting when Ald. John Hayes was making a speach in defence of the city's continued use of 2,4-D as a weed control.

Hayes said if the parks crew stops using the spray, dandelions will run rampant. Then he added, tongue in cheek: "Maybe we should get rid of them the way the Chinese got rid of flies, by killing everyone they saw."

Replied Wright: "Don't kid yourself, I was over there, and they're back!"

When is a secret not a secret?

That's what we'd like to know following Forest Minister Tom Waterland's press release this week which attacked Sierra Club spokesman Bob Nixon.

The Times had used that same word to describe the report.

Waterland argued it wasn't "secret" because it had been distributed to a number of selected agencies — mostly government.

Turning to Webster's dictionary for some help we find a secret is really "something kept from the knowledge of others or shared only confidentially with a few."

Sorry, Tom, but we think your report qualifies . . . or at least it did until it got into the paper this week.

Town Talk echoes the sentiments of all Times' staff in wishing a speedy recovery to "colleague-across-the-hall" Gorde Hunter who is languishing in Royal Jubilee Hospital.

The acerbic Colonist columnist went in for tests Thursday after a brief spell of feeling under the weather.

Listen, Gorde, the office wags suspect it was the weather — and too much golf — but everyone wishes you a speedy recovery.

There's a young lad out in the Gordon Head area doing quite nicely, it seems, selling ballpoint pens at 4 for $1, ostensibly on behalf of the Deaf and Hard of Hearing Institute.

The youngster is trudging around with a big box of pens — which don't mention the institute by name — giving a plaintive pitch which has apparently moved a goodly number of homeowners to cough up cash for the handicapped.

One lady got nabbed the other night and only later thought to phone the institute just to double-check that everything was on the up-and-up.

An institute spokesman told her its annual fund drive doesn't occur until May, the canvassers have proper ID and the youngster in question is on his own and not, repeat not, representing the institute.

Mini-Revolution Greets Couvelier on Parking

Rumblings of a mini-revolt and a weary get-your-facts-straight comments today greeted Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier's suggestion that municipal employees and Camosun College students be made to pay for parking privileges.

Municipal hall staff are fuming over the mayor's comments, an employee said, while a member of the Camosun College board pointed out that a decision has already been made to establish student parking fees.

Board member Peter Dorazio also noted that several other avenues have been explored to encourage students to use alternative means of transportation.

"I do wish he (Couvelier) had checked with Camosun College first," Dorazio added.

At the municipal hall the No. 1 topic of conversation this morning was the mayor's statement that the parking "frill" be eliminated to encourage better use of public transit.

Couvelier said Thursday he was opposed to the recommendation in a report that more land be blacktopped to provide additional parking spaces.

"It's the principle that concerns me," he said. "On the basis that we are paying our people top dollar, I'm opposed to continuing the practice of providing free parking."

A spokesman for Local 374 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees declined comment until the matter has been discussed by the local's executive.

But an employee (who preferred for obvious reasons not to be identified) said staff reaction is unanimously indignant.

He said many employees live a considerable distance from the hall, some as far away as Colwood, and cars are their only practical form of transportation.

For most of the 150 employees at the municipal hall public transportation is out of the question because only a couple of routes serve the area, he said.

"We work in the opposite direction from the public transportation lines" feeding the downtown area, the employee added.

"We could travel by bus but how long would it take — an hour or more? To suggest staff get up at 6.30 a.m. for an 8.30 starting time at the office is a little ridiculous."

He said if Saanich starts charging its employees for parking they will clog up Darwin and other roads in the area, as well as the parking lot at the Town and Country shopping centre.

As for Camosun College, Dorazio said if the mayor had bothered to check he would have found out that the board's decision on paid parking was made about a month ago.

The board has also examined such initiatives as registered car pools, securable covered bike stalls and a substantial board subsidy of up to $25 per student per semester for bus passes, he said.

The board is asking Saanich to relax its parking requirements so that only about five acres of additional college parking need be provided in the nearby Hudson's Bay Wood, not 8.5 acres.

The use of the woodland for that purpose has generated fierce opposition.

But Dorazio said the board believes it has done everything it can to reduce the need for parking there. "The pressure on the woods is minimal right now," he added.

Crowded Conservatory Gets St. Ann's Annex

Although government spokesman won't confirm it, the Times has learned that the annex of St. Ann's Academy is to be made available as the conservatory's future home.

With its more than 1,200 students and faculty and staff of 100, the conservatory has been struggling against impossibly crowded conditions at Craigdarroch Castle.

The castle has been the conservatory's home, courtesy of the City of Victoria, since 1968.

St. Ann's annex, a substantial building behind the original building on Academy Close, designed by prominent Victoria architect John Di Castri, will provide the conservatory with approximately twice its present space, says Winifred Wood, vice principal of the conservatory which is headed by her husband, Robin Wood.

She says the decision has come just in time to avert a serious crisis in conservatory affairs.

"So many valuable programs simply cannot be developed under the present crowded conditions," she says.

"Some of our excellent faculty members have reached a point of frustration that could mean their loss to us next year if teaching conditions are not improved."

The original St. Ann's building is considerably larger than the annex but it is in extremely poor condition, requiring expenditure in the neighborhood of two or three million dollars before being suitable for major occupancy.

Handicapped Win Battle For Own Home

Rezoning to permit a Redfern Street house to become a group home for mentally handicapped is a forward step in the struggle for recognition, a spokesman for the handicapped said today.

Victoria council Thursday approved the rezoning of a former private residence allowing it to be used by the Capital Region for the Mentally Handicapped, which sought to have eight members and two staff reside there.

Council adopted an Advisory Planning Commission recommendation limiting the capacity to six members and two staff, but endorsed the principle of housing handicapped in a residential area.

APC said this particular house, with small yard and lack of screening or parking space was unsuitable for the larger number of persons.

Elly Bowerman, chairman of Handicapped Action Committee, said those who objected to the proposal were unjustified. "Down through the years, handicapped have proven to be good tenants."

She also said she had mixed feelings on the limitation to six residents and two staff, realizing there have to be zoning regulations. But any persons living in a family unit should have the same rights as non-handicapped families.

"Do we state to a family, 'you can have no more than six children'?"

Ald. Bob Wright failed in a move that would have forced the CRMH to increase the privacy of the building through landscaping changes.

The Redfern issue has sparked some heated debate in the past and neighbors on the street have complained that if the group home goes ahead it will drive down property values.

Ald. Bill McElroy said the Redfern situation presented a very tough problem for council because "anyone opposed to this has been painted as a red-neck and I think this is very unfair."

He said he sympathized with the CRMH but felt the original proposal for 10 adults would have created obvious overcrowding and even eight was pushing it.

Ald. Robin Blencoe said that "if it was two parents moving in there with eight children we wouldn't say anything."

Bar Pushes Free Information Law

The Canadian Bar Association has called on its 25,000 members to press governments into passing freedom of information legislation.

Bar president Tom Walsh said Thursday the association will be asking its members, and in particular the 64 Members of Parliament who are lawyers, to "use every kind of pressure we can to get governments in Canada to get this type of legislation."

Walsh said it is vital "to find out what the bureaucrats are doing," but noted that at present citizens have virtually no right of access to government information.

"This is a fundamental issue important to all Canadians," he said. "The veil of secrecy that surrounds governments at all levels interferes with the inherent rights of individuals in a democratic society."

Walsh, in Victoria to attend a national conference on the freedom of information issue, made the comments at a press conference during which he released a model freedom of information bill prepared by a special committee of the association.

Said committee chairman Peter Grant of Toronto: "It's a bill whose time has come. We've been waiting months and years for it."

Walsh said he hoped the model bill will foster debate and encourage governments into acting.

"Judging from its track record to date, if we waited for the present government to come up with meaningful legislation we'd be waiting for another 10 years," he said.

The special bar committee, which included Professor Murray Rankin of the University of Victoria, spent about eight months drafting the bill.

Walsh said the bill could serve as a model for federal or provincial legislation. Only two provinces, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, have freedom of information legislation. Ontario has a royal commission on the issue, and British Columbia has been studying the matter for the past 18 months.

Walsh said the bill would give citizens the right to see and copy all government information except in six narrowly defined areas — cabinet records, policy advice, national defence, law enforcement and legal proceedings, personal privacy, and certain commercial and financial information.

It would open the door for public access to all task force reports, environmental impact studies, inspection reports, and the like which are suppressed by the various government departments.

The model bill would take precedence over all other acts including the Official Secrets Act, and would create an office of information commissioner to advise and mediate for citizens.

Citizens denied information could appeal to the courts.

The bill proposes prison sentences of up to five years without the alternative of fines for anyone breaching the legislation. However there would no action taken against an official who denies information in good faith.

Grant said the bill differs from the federal government's green paper on the subject in two major aspects. It suggests the courts — not the ministers — should be the final arbiters in deciding what information should be released. And it narrows the list of exemptions.

He noted the essential features of the model bill have already received unanimous approval by all parties.

But he could not venture an opinion why the government has failed to act.

"Once a government has been in power a few years it seems terribly reluctant to open the closet doors."

The conference, which opened Thursday night with a speech by Privacy Commissioner Inger Hansen, winds up today at the University of Victoria.

Time to Understand and to Explain

CHICAGO (CP) — Ongoing National Hockey League expansion talks were recessed shortly after 4 a.m. CST today and set to resume six hours later.

NHL president John Ziegler, accompanied to an early-morning news conference by Howard Baldwin, president of the World Hockey Association, said much of the previous 12 hours had been spent in explaining the latest expansion proposals.

Baldwin's New England Whalers, along with three Canadian WHA franchises, are to become part of the NHL in time for the 1979-80 season if agreement can be reached.

"There was lots of things that we presented to them that we've been working on for two months," Ziegler told reporters. "It just was going to take a long time for them to even understand it."

He said a good deal of the time was taken "explaining, trying to have them understand what it took to arrive at this, what it means, why we think it's beneficial, why we think it's fair."

Baldwin, while admitting there were problems, refused to be drawn into discussions that might jeopardize the meetings.

"I'm not going to get into the actual nitty-gritty of what we're discussing or where the hangups are," he said. "It just wouldn't be beneficial to anybody.

Asked if there were any new stumbling blocks creeping in, Baldwin replied: "I don't know of any old ones. It's just an awful lot to grasp in a short period of time."

The NHL's board of governors finally gave the expansion committee clearance to proceed with the talks Thursday afternoon, ending two years of speculation that four — possibly five — teams from the struggling, WHA, which started eight-years ago, would join the NHL, leaving North America with one major professional league.

The previous three meetings — the latest about two weeks ago in Key Largo, Fla. — did not produce sufficient affirmative votes to proceed with expansion talks.

A three-quarters majority — or 13 of 17 teams — was required for approval.

A minority group, spearheaded by Toronto Maple Leafs president Harold Ballard, had successfully blocked previous proposed expansion plans with WHA teams beyond the governors' meetings.

The Florida rejection sparked widespread reaction across Canada, particularly in the three Canadian WHA cities — Edmonton, Winnipeg and Quebec — and in Ottawa, where the Commons gave unanimous approval to a motion by Liberal MP Louis Duclos urging the NHL to admit the Canadian teams.

The result was that Montreal Canadiens and Vancouver Canucks, both of whom were reported to have supported Ballard, switched their votes and allowed expansion talks to proceed.

Canadiens' president, Jacques Courtois, explained his club's reverse stand. "There were some variations made (to previous proposals) we found we could live with," he said. "It's not perfect as far as we are concerned because it's costing Montreal and a few others more than some of the other clubs.

"But it's a matter that, for the sake of expansion we should live with."

Frank Griffiths, chairman of the Canucks' board of directors, said: "The objectives Vancouver espoused have all been realized."

He said the present expansion proposal "is better, it met all our requirements and that's why we seconded it." Washington Capitals moved Thursday's motion to expand.

Griffiths said Vancouver's major concern was that expansion would eliminate the raiding and competition for under-age players.

"I don't know how you can say it any other way, but it will stop the piracy of youngsters into professional careers before they are old enough to know what it's about. . . .

"There is evidence it would continue if we didn't bring it (expansion) to a conclusion."

The WHA said following the rejection in Florida it would continue operating next year with six teams — the three Canadian franchises; New England Whalers, who will join them in the NHL if expansion is agreed upon, and Cincinnati Stingers and Birmingham Bulls.

A five-year program outlined in Toronto included the signing of exceptional under-age junior players.

The expansion teams were reported to have agreed with the $24 million cost of admittance to the NHL ($6 million each) and to most other areas of the proposed expansion agreement.

Under the formula they would be allowed to protect two skaters and two goaltenders with the remaining players going into a common draft. The NHL, on the other hand, would be able to keep 15 players and two goalies.

Each player taken in the draft would cost the drafting team $125,000 but WHA clubs could deduct the sum from their $6 million entrance fee. Some 90 players currently with WHA clubs would revert to clubs holding their NHL rights, which would then determine whether they were worth protecting.

Another area of disagreement was that while the NHL teams would not have to include first-year pros on their protected list, the exemption was withheld from the WHA.

Rowers Pay Own Way in U.S.

By JIM CRERAR
Times Staff

Athletic directors at Canadian colleges have a unique exercise program; they get together at least once a year and kick around the question of athletic scholarships.

They've been doing it for years but the result is always the same — school-sponsored grants-in-aid to athletes get shut out.

There are exceptions. Simon Fraser University is the most notable but the mavericks from Burnaby are barred from the lodge, which in the case of college sport is the Canadian Interuniversity Athletic Union.

Before you accuse the CIAU of being narrow-minded, though, you might consider Karl F. Drlica's views on the subject of athletic scholarships.

"I'm opposed to them," he says.

That's interesting because Drlica coaches at a large university in the U.S., a country where the practice of paying college athletes is an accepted fact.

His school is Oregon State in Corvallis, his sport is rowing and his winning percentage is the envy of most of his rivals. His school traditionally rates with the University of Washington and California at Berkeley as the top three in rowing on the U.S. west coast.

But the 65 male and female rowers he brought with him to compete against UVic in a dual meet at Elk Lake don't get a dime.

They haven't in the 30 years the 61-year-old Drlica's been coaching at Oregon State and they didn't for the 19 years Drlica's predecessor, Ed Stevens, coached there.

Why not?

Drlica's answer to that one is beautifully simple.

"I don't think any other university recruits because there isn't much rowing in the high schools."

So there.

If you want to go into Drlica's philosophy on athletic scholarships, though, he'll gladly oblige.

Like many Canadian athletic directors and coaches, Drlica likes to think his rowers are there because they want to be, not because he pays them.

"Rowing is much more exacting and demanding than many realize," he said. "There aren't too many people who want to commit themselves to year-round training in the cold and the rain."

Drlica and his assistants, Kelly Moore and Ralph Mathison, may soon find out if money can buy that kind of dedication.

Rowing is beginning to catch on at the high school level and Drlica thinks it eventually will lead to scholarships.

The pressure isn't coming from the universities but from the high school coaches and parents of the youngsters involved.

"They want to see their kids go somewhere and they're making moves in that direction," Drlica pointed out.

But until they start handing out money, Drlica's kids will continue to pay their own way by working for the registrar's office during peak periods and cleaning up the football stadium and basketball pavilion after Oregon State home games.

Oregon State Dominates

UVic won the women's varsity eights event with a time of three minutes, 56 seconds over the 1,000-metre course, beating OSU by one-fifth of a second.

The men competed over 2,000 metres.

Both teams now travel to the Mainland to compete in the University of British Columbia invitational meet at the weekend.

Oregon State University scored a near-sweep Thursday while winning a dual rowing meet against the University of Victoria at Elk Lake.

Flora Undefeated in Title Win

VERNON (CP) — The Flora Martin rink of Victoria has become the first team to complete the Canadian senior women's curling championship without a loss.

Martin recorded her tenth consecutive victory in easy fashion, with a 10-2 win over Jennie Boomhower of Charlottetown in eight ends Thursday night.

The B.C. skip, who won provincial and national titles in 1974 and 1975 said she never dreamed of going through the competition undefeated.

"This is the most satisfying victory for me because the competition was tougher this year," she said. "This is the strongest team I've ever had."

Martin hopes to defend her title next year. "We've talked about it and I think our rink will stay intact to try again in 1980."

Winnipeg's Dorothy McKenzie and Fern Seel of Moose Jaw, Sask. tied for second with 7-3 records.

Earlier, Martin defeated Robeson 8-6.

PERTH, Scotland (CP) — Gaby Casanova of Switzerland took advantage of Canadian misses today to defeat Lindsay Sparkes of North Vancouver 6-3 and advance to the final of the women's world invitational curling championship.

The Canadians, who finished second in the round-robin portion of the 11-country tournament, led 3-0 after four ends but fell apart in the next five ends.

The Swiss scored one in the fifth and stole two in the sixth to tie the score. Then Casanova stole single points in each of the seventh, eighth and ninth ends for the win.

PRINCE GEORGE (CP) — An Ontario rink is assured of winning the Canadian mixed curling championship, ending a 15-year domination of the title by western rinks.

However, with just one round remaining, it's still not clear whether the Roy Lund foursome from Northern Ontario or Bob Widdis's Ontario quartet will take the championship back East.

Northern Ontario had the inside track after Thursday's two rounds, when Lund defeated Roger Goss of Prince Edward Island 5-3 and Ivan Carlisle of British Columbia 8-5 to move to the top of the standings with a 9-1 mark.

You Think It's Tough Getting There!

By BILL WALKER
Times Staff

There are always two stories in any game — winning and losing.

The winners are laughing and joking and the losers are saying "wait until next year."

Then, of course in curling, there's that old chestnut — "It's always tougher getting there." Somehow they tie together. And here's why.

There have been been a lot of winners at the Pepsi Cola Canadian junior men's curling championship at Victoria Curling Club this week, but only one loser.

The Mike Moss rink of Yellowknife, North West Territories, was 0-10 going into today's final game against Nova Scotia in the 12-rink round robin and needing that one win to salvage everything.

Because at least three of them — the others are third Dean Brown, second Grant Lloyd and lead Ron Haggett — won't be back. They will be going to University in Calgary or Edmonton.

But oh, how close they had come earlier.

They were tied coming home against Prince Edward Island with last rock against. They lost. P.E.I. is 7-3.

They were tied coming home against Northern Ontario with last rock against. They lost. Northern Ontario is 5-5.

And they were four down to Nova Scotia, with last rock, and barely missed. Moss just failed on a last-rock double that would have given them four, a tie and an extra end.

Disappointed? "Obviously," said Yukon-N.W.T. representative Lee Kubica. "They figured they could win a few games."

But when it comes to "getting there", any rink from that area has to be a winner.

Check the facts.

There are two playdowns to set up the zone final and, as Yellowknife and Whitehorse, the two main cities, are 1,500 miles apart and there are about 30 to 40 teams to be considered in the area, you get some idea of the problems.

Two teams come out of each area and the final this year was at Yellowknife. The four team, double round-robin ended in a tie as everybody beat everybody else. That meant sudden-death and how the Moss rink got here.

So what's so tough?

Well, it's the weather. It's sometimes a factor up there.

Or how would like to be on the Dawson city rink which competed in the zone final out of the Yukon?

Dawson City is about 360 miles from Whitehorse and the rink made the junket by car. The trip takes about eight hours.

"The roads were fine," said Kubica. "They were frozen solid." He explained There were four stopping points along the route and travellers take down-filled sleeping bags — just in case.

It was -67 celsius (which is about 75 below fahrenheit) when the team left home. It was 45 below when it arrived. It was about 20 below in the rink.

Then they lost and had to drive home.

And you think it's tough "getting there".

New Champ A Certainty

By BILL WALKER
Times Staff

Two facts were certain when the final draw of the Pepsi Cola Canadian junior men's curling championship got under way at the Victoria Curling Club this morning.

One. Either Warren Proctor of Saskatchewan or Geoff Cunningham of Newfoundland was going to finish on top of the 12-rink, round-robin competition and gain a bye into Saturday's final.

Second. There will be a new champion.

Proctor and Cunningham each skipped their rinks to three victories Thursday to run their records to 9-1 and, as they clash head-on today, only one can finish at the head of the class.

Meanwhile, defending champion Darren Fish of Alberta floundered in his final test. He was knocked out of possible playoff contention when he suffered two defeats. He was upset by Nick Rizzo of Ontario, 8-6, and by Stacey Coomber of Powell River, 8-7 in an extra end.

But even though he was out and threatening to change his rink around before next year, Fish still held a key to the playoffs as far as Manitoba and Prince Edward Island were concerned in his final match against Mert Thompsett of Manitoba.

A Manitoba victory would assure Thompsett of a tie for second with the loser of the Saskatchewan-Newfoundland game, but an Alberta victory, combined with a Prince Edward Island win over B.C., would put skip Peter Jenkins of P.E.I into a playoff with Thompsett for third place.

Saskatchewan, which has lost only to Alberta, took out New Brunswick 7-3, Northern Ontario 8-4 and Nova Scotia 8-6, Thursday.

Newfoundland, which has lost only to P.E.I., squeezed by the Territories 5-4, trimmed Nova Scotia 9-2 and bombed New Brunswick, 12-4.

Manitoba (8-2) kept pace by edging B.C. 5-3, slipping by P.E.I. 5-4 in an extra-end classic and then routing Quebec, 12-5.

Jenkins retained his slim hope of getting P.E.I. (7-3) into a playoff when he downed Denis Marchand of Quebec 7-4 and, after losing that heartbreaker to Manitoba, came back to trim Ontario, 11-5.

For Coomber, who had his problems earlier in the week, the win over Fish was his finest hour. He made the big shots when they were needed. In the eighth, lying one and with Fish having second shot in the front 12-foot, Coomber ignored a draw for two and gambled in a bid for four points. He went for second shot, chipped it through a port, got three points and only barely missed getting the fourth as his shooter was swept out of play.

Then in the 11th, after getting a rock behind cover, he laid two perfect guards in succession and stole the winning point.

Thompsett's win over P.E.I. was a beautifully-played game. Thompsett gained the upper hand with a steal of one in the third and maintained control from then until he drew to the four-foot for the winning point in the 11th.

That halted Jenkins' winning streak at six.

Fish, who said he might change his rink for next year, came into the tournament with Wes Johnson of Red Deer replacing Lorne Barker at vice-skip, and with Barry Barker and Murray Ursulak at lead and second.

The semi-final playoff between the second and third-place finishers in the round-robin will take place Saturday at 9 a.m. with the winner meeting either Saskatchewan or Newfoundland in the final at 2:30 p.m.

Salmon Fishing Picks Up In Several Island Spots

Salmon fishing has taken a turn for the better at a number of Vancouver Island spots.

Limits of blues and a few chinooks to 15 pounds are showing off Secretary Island at Sooke. Use minnows with 75 feet of line and two pounds of lead for best results.

At Becher Bay, fair catches of chinooks to 19 pounds have been landed off Beechey Head, Church Island, Aldridge Point and the Trap Shack using 1½-inch minnows, super-strip or plain white hootchies trolled at depths over 60 feet.

J. Cleophas boated the heaviest chinook at Pedder Bay in recent days with a 22-pounder taken Tuesday off Christopher Point with a six-inch minnow trolled at about the 40-foot depth. About fifty per cent of the catch consists of blues to four pounds and a fair number of limits have been reported.

Fishermen at Oak Bay were topped by Gordon Bohnert, who boated a 28-pounder Thursday morning while trolling a yellow and green hootchie about 110 feet down near Chain Island. Other good spots have been Trial Island and The Gap with most of the catches, dominated by blues, taken on Krippled-Ks.

Returns are still poor off Sidney although a few chinooks to 13 pounds were landed in waters between the Anacortes ferry wharf and Sidney Spit.

Chinooks to 12 pounds and blues form a fifty-fifty catch off Wain Rock at first light in the morning. Hootchies trolled at the 25-foot depth have produced the top fish.

Blues and jacks to five pounds are grabbing blue and white hootchies and Squirts off Henderson Point and Bamberton first thing in the morning. Both light and deep lines are working.

Finlayson Arm fishermen enjoyed excellent success on Sunday but action has tapered off a little. Chinooks to 15 pounds and a few blues seem to be moving around in the area, bringing a hot-and-cold picture to individual spots. Squirts and hootchies have been the main producers.

Blueback returns have been hot at all depths off Nanaimo in the vicinity of Five Fingers and Snake Island and a few chinooks to 10 pounds are still available for fishermen trolling between 40 and 50 fathoms in depth. Any form of lure with red coloration appears to work for the blues and either green and white or blue and white hootchies are producing a majority of the chinooks.

Chinooks to 25 pounds are reported off the Bell Buoy at Comox with most coming in on strip trolled with six or eight ounces of weight.

Strip, bucktails and plugs are nailing chinooks to 18 pounds and blues just about everywhere off Campbell River.

Steelheaders are finding this warm weather has lowered water levels in most Island streams but some good catches were still coming in from the Nanaimo, Somass, Oyster, Qualicum, Tsolum, Quinsam and Gold systems.

The warm weather is also beginning to warm the Island lakes — meaning there might be some pretty good trout fishing around the corner.

Hawks Help Cats Take Second

Portland Winter Hawks helped Victoria Cougars clinch second place in the Western Division of the Western Hockey League with a brawling 4-1 Thursday night victory over New Westminster Bruins at Queen's Park Arena.

The loss left Bruins, who had been gunning for the runner-up spot behind Portland, five points behind Cougars with two games remaining.

Cougars and Winter Hawks, who each have two games left, clash tonight at Portland and the Victoria club closes out its schedule against Medicine Hat Tigers at 8:30 p.m. Saturday at Memorial Arena.

In the final seconds of the game, referee Terry Gregson awarded Portland a penalty shot after Bruins' coach Ernie McLean sent two extra players onto the ice. This sparked a rush by Bruins' players onto the ice from the bench.

Seven New Westminster players were assessed major and game misconducts after they charged the two Winter Hawk players on the ice. The rest of the Portland team remained on their bench.

Bruins were nailed with 156 of the game's 191 penalty minutes.

In the only other game, Calgary Wranglers scored twice in the final three minutes to earn a 7-7 tie with the Broncos in Lethbridge.

The teams were tied 1-1 after the opening period and Calgary held a 3-2 edge after 10 minutes.

Nicklaus Can Stop Explaining

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — It was with a definite sense of relief that Jack Nicklaus said: "That's got to help. I don't know what I'll do tomorrow, but that's got to help a lot."

Golf's greatest performer, off to probably the slowest start of his career, fired a five-under-par 67 Thursday — his best round of the year and his first under-par effort in three weeks.

"I knew it would happen — I just didn't know when," said Nicklaus, defending champion in the $440,000 Tournament Players Championship. "I was getting sick and tired of explaining why I was playing poorly. I'm delighted to be back."

He was tied for second behind Kermit Zarley, who took advantage of ideal playing conditions to rip tough Sawgrass with a course-record matching 66 and establish the first-round lead Thursday.

Sharing second with Nicklaus at 67 were U.S. Open champ Andy North and Lanny Wadkins, winner of the Los Angeles Open earlier this year.

Gil Morgan, Ron Streck, Jim Nelford of Burnaby and veteran Don January were at 68. And there were a dozen players, including Dan Halldorson of Brandon, Man., at 69 — in sharp contrast to the scores usually yielded by the Sawgrass links, often raked by gale-force winds.

Last year, for example, there were only 25 sub-par rounds in the entire 72-hole tournament and only one score under 70. On this day alone, there were 20 scores under 70 and 53 under par.

Carner Unperturbed

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — JoAnne Carner didn't let the slow play bother her, but she did get a little worried about running out of cigarettes during the opening round of the $100,000 Sahara National Pro-Am.

"The shotgun format of play is always slow, as are most pro-am tournaments," she said Thursday after shooting a course record 64 to take a two-stroke lead over Donna Young.

"I went through two packs of cigarettes and my amateur partners were ready to send to the clubhouse for more if I thought it would help," said Carner.

The winner of last week's Ladies Professional Golf Association tournament in San Diego, Carner carded seven birdies and no bogeys in recording a 32-32 on the 6,108-yard, par 36-35—71 Sahara layout.

The round, in which the LPGA players were teamed with three amateur partners, took nearly six hours to complete.

"I mentally prepared myself for it," said Carner. "It didn't bother me."

Amy Alcott shot a 4-under-par 67 to hold down the third spot, a stroke back of Young's 66, after the first round of the 72-hole event that concludes Sunday.

Germans Bounce Rangers

Cologne earned a 1-1 draw to go into the semi-finals of the continent's most important club competition with a 2-1 aggregate win.

Dieter Mueller sealed Rangers fate with a goal three minutes after the half of a bad-tempered and bruising game. The Scots tied it with a disputed goal from Tommy McLean three minutes from the end, but it was not enough to save them.

West Germany now has five teams in the semi-finals of the three European competitions, the European Cup, the Cup Winners' Cup and the European Football Union (UEFA) Cup — an unprecedented feat. England, with four in 1971, held the previous record.

Cologne goes into today's semi-final draw along with Nottingham Forest of England — the favorites — Malmoe of Sweden and Austria Wien.

AROUND OUR SHORES

What promises to be the liveliest dinghy sailing club in town is due to be launched April 1 in the Green Room of the University of Victoria's Commons Building.

At 7:30 p.m. that evening, the Cadboro Bay Sailing Association will hold its organizational meeting.

While many of the members are expected to be university students, the club will also be open to other dinghy sailors in the community.

The club will sail out of the Cadboro Bay Gyro Park and the municipality of Saanich has agreed to allow a 10,000 square foot (929 square metres) dinghy enclosure to be built there.

The proposed annual membership fees will have to be ratified April 1 but they are $20 for family memberships, $15 for single adults, and $10 for juniors.

Yearly storage fees for boats more than 10 feet will be $40. Storage for boats under 10 feet will cost $20.

If you're interested in learning more about this fledgling club give Henry Niezen a ring at 477-9415.

We received a call Friday night from Linda Richter asking my husband George to race her Cal 20 Elsinor so that she could crew with John Martin in Refuge. Along with Margaret Mercer, we won the first race on Saturday but never made it quite high enough in the last two races.

It was a great weekend, however, and Por Gusto deserved to win with her consistent performance of two seconds and a fourth.

RVYC's junior team, captained by Dave Pertoia, won all their three races and the Juniors Howe Sound Challenge Cup, sailed at the West Vancouver Yacht Club. Helping to bring home the coveted silverware were Jeff Eckhard, Paul Callan, Stephanie Bacon, Alan Moss, Richard Dighton, Chris Sheridan, Bob Howell and Mark Smith.

The Turkey Head Sailing Association will have its last two races of the season on Sunday. Many Victoria Canoe Club members will head up-Island on Saturday to take part in the annual Cowichan Down River Races. The races will start at Stoltz Pool at 10 a.m., finishing below the "white" bridge at Duncan. There will be racing for both 327s and standard recreational class boats. There will also be a mixed-doubles and a centennial race from Vimy later in the day.

Frank Johnson says the access to Vimy is by Gibbons Road, turning left on Vimy, then right along Cambrai, along Winchester and down Heritage. The "fire road" down to the river is blocked but there is limited parking on the berm of the road.

HELMETED POLICEMAN raises arms to defend himself as he is attacked by baton-swinging demonstrators in clash at Place de la Republique in Paris today. Tens of thousands of steelworkers and radicals took part in demonstrations thoughout the city protesting the French government's policy for the steel industry.

Widespread Bombing Reported in N. Ireland

BELFAST (AP) — More than 30 bombs exploded within two hours Thursday night in 14 towns and cities across Northern Ireland. Police called it one of the biggest bomb attacks ever launched by the outlawed Irish Republican Army (IRA).

No casualties were reported but there was heavy property damage as bombs went off in all of Northern Ireland's six counties.

Authorities reported explosions in Belfast, Londonderry, Dundrum, Kilkeel, Gortin, Cookstown, Moy, Newry, Newcastle, Dungannon, Lisnaskea, Kilrea, Lurgan and Stewartstown.

Most of the targets were banks but the bombs and incendiary devices also hit stores and local government offices.

In downtown Belfast, three bombs exploded in the Ulster Bank on Waring Street and another at a branch of the Northern Bank on Alliance Avenue. There were explosions and fires on Maze Street in the heart of the city.

Police and army units were on emergency duty to search for more bombs. Shots could be heard around the city as troops fired at unexploded devices in attempts to detonate them.

A bomb exploded in the offices of the local council in Cookstown, County Tyrone, while a regular monthly council meeting was in progress. No one was hurt.

Six bombs exploded in the centre of Londonderry, Northern Ireland's second-largest city, causing damage estimated at $2 million.

Second Murder By IRA?

Times News Services

BRUSSELS — Two men shot and killed a Belgian national bank official — perhaps the wrong man — and police speculated the Thursday night slaying was connected with the assassination of the British ambassador in the neighboring Netherlands only hours earlier.

The Amsterdam newspaper De Telegraaf said today it received an anonymous call claiming the Irish Republican Army was responsible for the killing of the British ambassador, Sir Richard Sykes, in The Hague.

"This is only the beginning," the caller was quoted as saying. "It's war. Tomorrow we will kill either the (British) ambassador in Belgium, France or (West) Germany."

The newspaper reported that the man spoke with an Irish accent, but there was no reference to the later shooting here of bank official Andre Michaux.

The 47-year-old Michaux was cut down as he parked his car in front of his home in a Brussels suburb. Belgian investigators said they believe the killers, who escaped in a car, thought Michaux was someone else.

But they declined to say who the intended target was. A diplomat lives opposite the Michaux residence , but both NATO and the British embassy denied reports the diplomat is Sir John Killick, British ambassador to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

Both said Killick's home is in another suburb far from the site of the killing and refused to give the name of the diplomat living in the house opposite the Michaux residence.

There had been widespread speculation the assassins who killed Sykes were from the Irish Republican Army, battling to end British rule of Northern Ireland, but police said they have no evidence.

Sykes and his valet were killed outside the envoy's residence in The Hague on Thursday morning by two gunmen who escaped in rush-hour traffic.

Meanwhile, Dutch police today started house-to-house investigations in their search for the killers of Sykes.

City centre residents who believed they could help authorities were being interviewed in two police vehicles parked near the embassy residence outside which the 58-year-old ambassador was shot.

At Last . . . a Plan for Equality

elizabeth forbes

Earlier this month, in the House of Commons, when justice minister Marc Lalonde unveiled a five-year plan, Toward Equality for Women, envisioning eventual equality in legislation, the family and the work force, there was some name calling and considerable criticism.

I received a copy of that plan a day or so ago.

Since then I've gone through it carefully and I believe it sets out in plain language and with few frills, a program in which much can — and should — be accomplished.

Before giving a run-down on some of the highlights let me remind you that the General Assembly of the United Nations designated 1975 as International Women's Year with the object of defining a society in which women would participate fully in economic, social and political life.

To further this aim an international conference was held in Mexico City and a World Plan of Action (WPA) was adopted for the ten year period 1976-1985, proclaimed by the General Assembly as the Decade For Women: Equality, Development and Peace.

Governments were called upon to study the guidelines in the WPA and to establish short, medium and long-term targets and priorities.

Lalonde's five-year plan, Toward Equality For Women, is the Canadian government's contribution to that WPA request.

And, what Opposition members in the House of Commons failed to remember, or chose to ignore, its most important elements are based on recommendations and briefs to government from the Advisory Council on the Status of Women (ACSW).

Also, from responsible women's groups across the country, who through the years have devoted their time and energy to the movement for greater equality.

Yvonne Rosseau, president of the ACSW singles out two elements in the Plan which represent many areas where several important steps will be undertaken within government and by interested groups.

These are sections on data collection and a study of women in the economy.

Commencing this year all census, survey and program data related to the characteristics of individuals, will be collected and analyzed by sex wherever possible for administrative and publication purposes.

All federal departments and agencies will review immediately their data collection programs to eliminate sexual biases.

The treasury board secretariat, through their responsibility for a part of the Canadian Human Rights Act, will be consulted and asked to prepare appropriate procedures for ensuring compliance with this requirement.

Statistics Canada will revise its publication program and provide as much statistical information as possible on women and related subjects based on priorities established in the Plan of Action.

A study of women in the economy will be undertaken before 1980 by an independent agency, such as the Economic Council of Canada. It will focus on the current role and the increasing participation of women in the economy and the widening wage gaps between men and women.

Revisions to pension policy will also be aimed at the particular problems of women.

In addition a task force will report to Cabinet by 1980 on the impact of existing social security programs on the economic status of the older woman.

A major study on violence against women will be conducted. It will be presented to the Cabinet by 1981 and it will focus on violence between spouses, against women, and in the family as well as on crisis assistance in communities.

More research and program support is proposed for health promotion in the areas of safety of contraceptivies, occupational and environmental health hazards, alcohol, drug addiction and nutrition.

It is proposed to analyze joint custody provisions after divorce, recognizing the right of children to a continuing relationship with both parents.

Also to conduct further investigation regarding the implications of making child custody a non-triable issue, decided by mediation between spouses.

Other areas in the Plan cover voluntary organizations, native women, women in third world development, the taxation system and women as public servants and in the armed forces.

Furthermore — Before the end of 1979, special employment problems of women will be discussed on a separate agenda item by an Economic Conference of Premiers.

This phase of women's problems in the labor force, as well as Canada's Plan of Action for the United Nations Decade of Women will be discussed at a dinner meeting sponsored by the Victoria Business and Professional Women's Club and the Victoria Status of Women (SWAG) in the Empress Hotel Georgian Room on Monday, April 23, commencing at 6:30 p.m.

Prof Teaches Kindergarten

WINNIPEG (UPC) — An education professor who is spending a year away from the university to teach 34 kindergarten students says it's hard work.

"I felt it was too easy for me to rely on idealized notions of what teaching was like," said Kelly Seifert.

Seifert, who arranged with the Winnipeg School Division for a one-year stint teaching kindergarten, said he wasn't ready for the physical demands made on a teacher by energetic 5-year-olds.

"It's a somewhat unique arrangement," he said. "It's a way of testing out my own ideas and getting new experience."

Seifert has spent three years at the University of Manitoba preparing education students to teach nursery school and kindergarten students, but at times felt isolated from the day-to-day routine of teaching small children.

But Seifert is no stranger to the classroom.

After graduating with a PhD. from the University of Michigan he taught nursery school in Ann Arbor. Then he moved to California, where he directed a demonstration nurseryschool for education students at a state university.

He said being a male nursery or kindergarten teacher in a field traditionally occupied by women is like belonging to any other minority group.

"You feel like you're kind of the pet rabbit of the group. They don't think of what you can do with the kid, but, rather, 'Isn't it nice to have a man on staff at last.'

"I'm glad I'm working in this area, and so far this year I haven't had any problem with the male-female issue. If anything, I've been concerned whether the other teachers would think an 'esteemed' university professor could be sincere in teaching kindergarten, but so far it's worked out quite nicely."

Seifert's children spend a lot of time doing arts and crafts, but they also have a 50-square-foot map of the neighborhood laid out on the floor. Masking tape has been used to show the streets and the children make buildings from milk cartons and small boxes.

And, he said, when some chidren read to others who haven't yet mastered the skill, the ones who can't read "gradually get the idea that books have words in them and that they're interesting."

Houseware departments will be displaying more heavy-duty professional-type cookware, because more cooks are demanding this larger, heavier cookware that holds heat better. Before you buy a large stock pot, sautee pan or spaghetti cooker, compare prices at restaurant supply companies (some sell retail, too). Could be prices are better where professional cooks buy their pot and pans.

Walkers Now Taking Over

CHICAGO (AP) — Americans who have not caught the jogging fever are exercising and slimming down by walking, says Maurita Robarge, physical education professor at the University of Wisconsin. She says that walking, which helps the body's cardiovascular system and tones muscles, is fast becoming the fitness craze of 1979.

Arthritis Victims Wasting Millions on Phoney Cures

What are we buying? Dried gonads of the New Zealand green-lipped mussel. Radioactive gas. Bags of sand and other strange "cures." Peddling these rip offs is currently one of the biggest seams in Canada, and variations on these ridiculous products can be found in every province.

Right now in Halifax, doctors and the arthritis society are concerned about the number of patients buying electric massage hairs.

In Winnipeg, at the year end, word got around that Dr. Christian Barnard, the South African heart surgeon, had used and recommended a special heating pad. Hundreds of consumers lined up to buy them at $70. each.

While heat has been used for 2,000 years to comfort arthritic pain, these heating pads have no special properties for arthritis sufferers. Consumers who get taken in by the hucksters often defend their purchases stoutly.

There are two reasons for this. People who are constantly racked by pain want to believe there is a cure at the local store and they believe that they work sometimes because arthritis goes into remission, periods when the pain lessens.

If a patient tries out a "cure" during such a period, they attribute the lack of pain to the device. I fully expect a deluge of mail from people swearing that keeping a potato in their pocket or wearing a copper bracelet has helped them.

The hidden danger in putting your hopes in false cures is the same for any disease. Further damage, often irreversible, is done when you delay seeing a doctor. In the case of arthritis, treatment can slow or prevent crippling. But the scam goes on.

Would you fall for any of these products? Immune milk (whatever that is) at $2 a quart. I don't know how it helps, but it's reputed to. How about cactus juice? You think it might be hard to find in Canada. Don't be put off by that. People are out there selling it as an arthritis cure.

They are also selling horse chestnuts, concentrated sea water at 83 cents a pint, alfalfa tea and bee venom. They tell you if you want to make your own magic brew you can mix up some cod liver oil, milk, honey and vinegar. I don't know if you rub it on or drink it.

You might fall for a $1,000 reclining chair if your pain is great and your bank roll can stand the expense. Or you could buy a ticket to Boulder, Mont., where an abandoned uranium mine lures thousands each year, including Canadians, to soak up radon, a radioactive gas.

If that's beyond the victim's budget, the pitchman might try to sell you radioactive sand at $35 a bag. You can put it under your bed.

There are also mittens lined with radioactive uranium ore which are manufactured for 11 cents a pair, but sell to sick people for $65. If that doesn't work (and it won't), be prepared for a pitching promoting radioactive injections.

Canadians are also travelling to Mexico to visit various spas and clinics. They dispense drugs that are banned in the United States and Canada.

One Mexican clinic charges $700 for three days in their care and a year's supply of pills. The pills are DMSO (dimethyl sulfoxide), a byproduct of the manufacture of paper and banned in other countries.

You could save a lot of money and use the old home cure: a potato in your pocket. It won't help the pain, but it's cheaper than DMSO which won't help you either.

Another drug showing up is a mixture of hormones called Liefcort, which had been dispensed by a Dr. Liefmann in Montreal. After the drug was banned in Canada and the U.S., even for experimental purposes, it started showing up in the Mexican clinics under the names Rolistrone and Parthenine, and as Rheumatril in Santo Domingo.

"Source 23" is another touted remedy. It is said to contain minerals, and is sold through radio stations.

Some other worthless cures the arthritis society has researched, and for which Canadians are spending thousands of dollars per year, are Chinese herbal pills, various lotions, flu vaccine shots, and even faith healers who practice the "laying on of hands".

So why don't you forget all these marvels and see your doctor if you have arthritic pain?

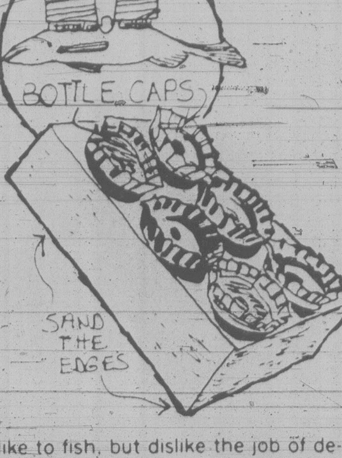
PLAYING THE SCALES



If you like to fish, but dislike the job of de-scaling your catch, try using this homemade device. It's safer than using a knife.

To make it, you'll need some bottle caps and a hand-sized chunk of wood. Just nail a few rows of the caps to one side of your block and sand its edges smooth to make it more comfortable to hold. Then grip the assembly like a scrub brush, and the scales should rub off easily.

Liver Distasteful

NEW YORK (AP) — Liver is the most disliked food among dieters, according to a recent survey taken by the Diet Workshop. The dieters listed ice cream, chocolate chip cookies and potato chips as their favorite forbidden foods and claim that those foods whet their appetite for other foods.

Kids Deserve Luxury of 'Blues'

By L. L. Coleman, MD

Small children and adolescents must be permitted the luxury of having temporary feelings of depression, commonly known as "the blues." Even though some parents may tend to ask, "What do they have to worry about?" the complexities of their emotional lives are great.

It is true that small children don't have to earn a living and are not burdened by the financial and social problems of the family. Yet, they have their conflicts, jealousies, insecurities and brother-sister rivalries.

When it is realized that children have the right to temporary depression, parents will respect it and help them to "live through it" without making them feel embarrassed or rejected.

It's not easy to grow up in this complicated, frenetic age. Children must be encouraged to give expression to their concerns. Even though the reasons may not seem monumental to adult observers, they are, indeed, of enormous importance to children who are far more helpless in understanding their own confusions.

My doctor thinks I have an overactive thyroid gland. I have been given pills and have been taking them for five weeks. Nothing seems to happen. Would I be better off with an operation? — Miss H. U.

Dear Miss U.:

There are a number of confusing aspects to your letter. First, when you say the doctor "thinks" you have an overactive thyroid you fail to recognize that this conclusion can be arrived at only with very special tests.

Today, radioactive iodine uptake studies, T3 and T4 studies, and other sophisticated tests confirm a diagnosis of hyperthyroidism, or overactivity of the thyroid.

Second, you have been using your prescribed pills for a short period of time and already you are disappointed that your recovery is not complete. Nervousness and anxiety, so common i hyperthyroid people, may account for your impatience.

And third, it seems that this impatience is already driving you to seek other forms of treatment like surgery which, I am sure, according to your doctor, is premature.

You must be patient with your treatment. The excellent drugs that are now available for suppressing excess hormones produced by the thyroid often bring dramatic results in hyperthyroidism.

The Short of It

BIRMINGHAM (CP) — English widow Minnie Giles, 68, stands four feet, five inches tall, and this poses a problem. She recently had to move from her ninth-floor flat because she can't reach the ninth-floor button in the elevator.

Joggers Should Wait

TORONTO (CP) — Joggers should wait at least 90 minutes after eating a heavy meal before they go out running, says a release from St. John Ambulance. The organization said joggers should start on their routine gradually and check with a doctor to make sure they are physically fit.

Youth Clinic

Young readers' questions on human relations and sex are answered by a panel of experts: Saul Levine, psychiatrist; Marion Powell, medical doctor; Graham Cotter, clergyman; and Bruce Vichert, social worker. Send questions to Youth Clinic, The Victoria Times, 2621 Douglas St., Victoria, B.C., V8W 2N4.

DEAR DR. LEVINE: I am a 15-year-old girl and my friends tell me that I am very mature for my age. Here's my problem. My sister is married to this really cute guy who is 28. When he drove me home one night he started necking with me and he asked me if I would have sex with him. Since that time, we have had sex many more times. The problem is that I think I'm pregnant. What should I do? Should I tell him? Should I tell my sister and ask her if she would adopt the baby, since the father is her husband?

Don't tell me to get an abortion because I think it's wrong to kill unborn children.

ANSWER: You are in a tough situation. Your excuse is that you're young, and contrary to what your friends say, obviously immature (except perhaps physically). The individual who is really irresponsible in all of this is your brother-in-law.

Your baby will need a warm, secure, loving family, and it doesn't sound to me like he'll get all that in your sister's and brother-in-law's home. I may be wrong about this, but I do have strong doubts about the viability of their marriage.

You can get help from teen clinics, school guidance counsellors and the Children's Aid Society. You can be helped via support, advice, nutrition and planning by people who have worked with other very young unwed mothers. Your baby can be given up for adoption into a family that can ensure a wonderful life for him or her.

I frankly don't know whether you should tell your sister just who the father is. It depends on your relationship to her, your feelings for her husband and your thoughts about their marriage.

DEAR DR. POWELL: I have been on the pill for exactly one month and have not menstruated. Is this normal, or is there a possibility I could be pregnant?

ANSWER: Following the first cycle of birth control pills there should be a period of bleeding within two to three days after the last pill is taken. Occasionally, this bleeding does not occur because the pill has such a low dose of estrogen that the lining of the uterus does not develop sufficiently to produce a menstrual flow.

So your situation may be perfectly normal and should not give you a lot of concern.

I would like to add one word of caution about the possibility of pregnancy. If your period prior to starting the pill was normal and you followed the advice usually given, to use some other method of contraception for the first 10 days of the first cycle on the pill it isn't likely that you are pregnant. If you miss a second period after your second cycle, have a pregnancy test performed immediately.

DEAR DR. COTTER: I am 17 and have loved a guy at school for over two years. He knows my feelings for him, and we have talked several times about them. He says that he likes me a lot.

But when we are in school we never talk. He is very popular and has a group of his own friends.

ANSWER: His behavior is that of a person who keeps the parts of his life in different compartments. You belong in a private compartment he just can't deal with in the midst of his popularity at school.

Another way ot putting it is that he is kidding himself that he cares about you.

I think you should accept your grief, and settle for a friend you may love less but be appreciated by more.

DEAR MR. VICHERT: I am a 14-year-old girl. All my friends have boyfriends and I don't. I feel very left out. I don't know what to do.

ANSWER: Your problem may solve itself when you are in high school. You will have an opportunity to meet new people and involve yourself in new activities. Until you meet the right guy I suggest you concentrate on developing your "nice personality," be enthusiastic, and take an active interest in the things that are happening at school.

DEAR ABBY: I've been divorced three years and have a 15-year-old son who lives with me. For the last eight months I have been dating a man I care a great deal for, but we are not engaged. (I'll call him Bob.)

When my son visits his father, which is nearly every weekend), Bob sleeps over, but I never let him sleep with me when my son is home.

This has caused some serious arguments between us. Bob insists that it wouldn't make any difference to my son if we slept together while he was home. I think it would, and I'm not about to ask him.

Do you think I'm being "deceitful and phony" to stick to my decision? My friend says I am.

How do other women in my position handle this?

NAMELESS, PLEASE

DEAR NAMELESS: I think your behavior can be more appropriately described as "discreet" than deceitful and phony.

Stick to your decision.

DEAR ABBY: I'm sure you've heard of Peeping Toms, but I'll bet you've never heard of a Peeping Tina.

Tina is my wife, and she's got this thing about looking at naked men.

We have a view of a large apartment building from our bedroom window, and Tina gets a kick out of looking at men in various stages of undress. While I'm watching TV, she is standing in the dark bedroom hoping to get a glimpse of a naked guy. She knows what time certain neighbors undress for bed and who pulls down the shades and who doesn't, and that's her entertainment.

Now I'm not a prude, and I've never denied Tina a good look at me in my birthday suit, so I can't understand why she's so fascinated with naked men. Is something wrong with her? She's 35 and I'm 37.

PUZZLED

DEAR PUZZLED: If Tina's pre-occupation with naked men is sudden, maybe something is wrong with her. Such curiosity is considered normal in adolescent children, but at 35 your wife should have outgrown it. She's too young to be considered a dirty old lady, but don't laugh it off. Talk it out. It's obviously sexual. Maybe Tina's missing something.

DEAR ABBY: I know a widow in her 70s who is quite remarkable. (I'll call her Aunt Libby.) Circumstances are such that this lady has had to make her home with her daughter for the last 12 years. Aunt Libby is active, cheerful and a joy to be with. Best of all, she knows how to keep from being in the way.

Aunt Libby makes herself available to stay in the homes of parents who want a responsible adult there for a weekend or longer.

She does this not so much for the money (which she can use, of course) but she likes to get out of her daughter's home for a while. I have even known her to spend her own money to go to a motel for a few days — saying she needs HER privacy, when it is really her wish to give her daughter's family THEIR privacy.

What do you think of a woman like that?

READER

DEAR READER: I think she deserves to be nominated for mother of the year.

DEAR ABBY: In reference to your letter signed FIREMAN'S DAUGHTER urging thrill seekers to stay home and watch the news on TV instead of driving to the scene of a fire: there's an alternative.

Become a volunteer fire fighter! That's what I did. As a trained fire fighter I fought fires and provided first aid at the scene of many accidents.

I was paid for attending drill practice as well as for each night I spent at the station. (It wasn't much, but it was something.) I not only got a great education in first aid, I was about to help people and satisfy my curiosity.

NATURALLY NOSY

DEAR NOSY: A good suggestion that could catch fire.

Early Italian Election Looming

ROME (AP) — A national election for Italy in June or earlier, two years ahead of schedule, appeared certain today following the decision of Socialist members of parliament to vote against Premier Giulio Andreotti's new government on its first vote of confidence next Thursday.

President Sandro Pertini swore in Andreotti's fifth cabinet, and Italy's 37th post-war government, on Wednesday. But with only 291 of the 630 seats in the Chamber of Deputies, it lacks a majority by 26 seats and needs the support of the Communists or the Socialists or their abstention on major votes to survive.

The Communists, who brought down the last government by withdrawing their support, announced earlier that they will actively oppose the new one.

Andreotti put together a coalition of his own Christian Democrats, Italy's largest party which has dominated every government since the war, and two minor parties, the Republicans and the Social Democrats.

The Socialists proposed that elections be held June 10, when the Italians vote to elect representatives to the European Parliament.

Recent opinion polls indicate that an election soon will make no significant change in the parliamentary strength of the major parties. The Christian Democrats now have 262 seats in the lower house, the Communists have 228 and the Socialists 57.

Viets Boost Defence on Border

HONG KONG (WP) — Vietnam has sent 20,000 to 50,000 troops to the Chinese border area to strengthen its defences but gives no sign yet of preparations for a major attack on China, analysts here said.

On the Chinese side of the border, railroad lines given over to transporting military equipment during China's invasion of Vietnam have recently returned to normal use, but a sizable Chinese force remains along the border, the analysts said. China's official travel agency has so far failed to resume weekly tours of Nanning, a regional capital about 100 miles from the border.

"I think the Vietnamese have been taught a lesson, that the Chinese are serious, that they will attack if provoked, so they want to be better prepared the next time," one analyst said. He did not rule out a Vietnamese attack on China but said there were no signs of offensive preparations so far and suggested the Vietnamese might want to avoid inciting another massive Chinese invasion.

An official Vietnamese foreign ministry note to the Chinese foreign ministry, dated Wednesday and released in full Thursday, said talks on normalizing relations could begin March 29 if all Chinese troops were withdrawn from Vietnam by that time. If they did not withdraw, the note said, the Vietnamese would "use their legitimate self-defence right to defend the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of their fatherland."

Analysts said independent information tended to contradict the Vietnamese claim that Chinese troops remain "some places from 6 to 12 miles deep inside Vietnamese territory," but one analyst said, "I suspect quite strongly that the Chinese have held onto some border area hills," which the Vietnamese have used in the past to fire into Chinese territory.

Peking complained Wednesday of Vietnamese "rifle and gun fire" into four separate Chinese border counties Sunday and Monday, "posing a serious threat to the life and property of Chinese inhabitants."

22 Japanese Seamen Lost

TOKYO (Reuter) — A total of 22 Japanese seamen were missing off Japan today in three separate accidents while crude oil spilled into the sea from a tanker in another accident, the Maritime Safety Agency said.

An extensive sea and air search was under way for 16 Japanese fishermen missing after their boat capsized in high waves Thursday night off the central Japanese port of Shimoda.

Two other men of the 59-ton Kaitoku Maru were rescued by nearby fishing boats.

The vessel had been taking part in rescue operations for two fishermen, missing after another boat sank in the same area Wednesday night.

The safety agency said four crew members were missing after a 358-ton gravel carrier, No. Eight Eishin Maru, sank today off the southern Japanese port of Oita.

Meanwhile, about 57,200 gallons of crude oil spilled into the sea after a 997-ton Japanese tanker collided with a 414-ton Japanese freighter Wednesday night in the Inland Sea, western Japan.

Nearly 40 patrol and pollution prevention ships were removing the spilled oil encircled in an oil fence, the agency said.

Policedog Torture Detailed By Man

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — Speaking from his hospital bed, with bandages swaddling his legs, a man claimed police officers handcuffed him and held him at gunpoint while their K-9 dogs attacked him.

"The dog bit me on my privates and on my buttocks all the way down to my ankles, except for where my boots were and he couldn't get any meat there," said Darrell Land. "An officer came and grabbed my pants, slit them lengthwise with a knife and let the dog attack."

Speaking from his hospital bed Thursday, Land said officers brought another dog — a small black puppy — to join in the attack "but that one was just sniffing so they took him away."

Land said officers ordered him out of his apartment when they mistook him for a suspect who had entered a neighboring apartment.

A police spokesman said only that Land was not the suspect officers were searching for and that the department's Internal Affairs Division was investigating the incident.

Chavez Switches to Bananas

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Farm union leader Cesar Chavez, frustrated at the negotiating table and on the picket line, is launching a new boycott campaign — this time against bananas.

Chavez, who led boycotts in past years against table grapes, lettuce and Gallo wine, on Thursday launched a coast-to-coast U.S. campaign seeking support of a boycott against Chiquita bananas.

The United Farm Workers (UFW) union that Chavez founded in 1965 picked Chiquita for its target because it is owned by United Brands, a conglomerate that also owns SunHarvest Inc., focus of the union's California vegetable-pickers strike.

SunHarvest, one of the largest lettuce growers in the United States, is among the 28 growers who have refused to offer a new contract exceeding President Carter's seven-per-cent wage guidelines.

But Chavez said that most lettuce workers make $3.70 an hour, less than the $4-an-hour level of workers exempted from the guidelines.

Chavez said he hopes to win a $1-an-hour boost. He said that when most major UFW contracts were won in 1970, the pay was $2 an hour, but when inflation is taken into account the pay today is only 13 cents higher. For piece workers, he said, the pay considering inflation is six cents less than originally granted.

S.A.'s Botha Cracks Back At Fund Use

JOHANNESBURG (Reuter) — South African Prime Minister Pieter Botha hit back Thursday against allegations by Eschel Rhoodie, a major figure in the country's "slush funds" scandal, that he and other cabinet ministers were involved in the affair.

In a statement reacting to a British Broadcasting Corp. interview Wednesday with Rhoodie, Botha drew a line between the authorized secret propaganda activities of the government's now disbanded department of information, once headed by Rhoodie, and the department's misuse of state funds.

Botha said the government had never denied knowledge of secret projects. But he said it had denied that members of the present cabinet knew of the department's secret financing of a pro-government South African newspaper, The Citizen, or of other irregularities.

The irregularities were said to include attempts to buy U.S. political support for South Africa's racial separation policies and take over two U.S. newspapers.

Rhoodie, wanted in South Africa on charges of theft and fraud, has claimed that Botha, former prime minister John Vorster who now is president, and other senior ministers knew of the department's activities.

Rhoodie charged that Vorster told a full meeting of the cabinet about The Citizen project just before the November, 1977, election. This has been denied by cabinet members, including Dr. Connie Mulder, the former information minister, who was toppled by the scandal a year after the election.

Mulder told political leaders about The Citizen project last Sept. 26, — after Vorster had announced he was resigning because of ill-health.

Meanwhile, a judicial commission headed by Judge Rudolf Erasmus began hearing evidence Thursday on whether cabinet members knew of the irregularities before the facts were publicized.

Another matter likely to be laid before the commission was the double murder of financier Robert Smit and his wife just before the 1977 election. Smit was running as a National Party candidate.

Bhutto Fate Saturday

RAWALPINDI (AP) — The Pakistani Supreme Court has announced it will rule Saturday on the appeal of the death sentence of former prime minister Zulfikar Ali Bhutto.

Bhutto, deposed by a military coup in July 1977, was convicted of ordering the murder of a political opponent in 1974. The court had previously upheld Bhutto's sentence and has been considering a petition for yet another review.

The bidding:

East	South	West	North
1♡	2♣	Pass	3♣

Opening lead - three of hearts.

The play in part-score hands is frequently more interesting than the play in game or slam hands. This is largely because the high-card values are more evenly divided between the opposing sides, and the battle to make or break the contract is often a touch-and-go affair.

Consider this deal where it appears that delarer must go down one. He seems destined to lose one spade, two hearts and two diamonds, and apparently there is no way out. But the fact is that if South handles his cards perfectly he winds up making the contract.

West leads a heart and East cashes his A-K before returning the deuce of hearts. South ruffs with the seven of clubs, plays the king of trumps, and continues with the eight of trumps to dummy's ace.

Declarer then leads a low spade from dummy. East cannot afford to rise with the ace; it would give South an extra spade trick and the contract. So, when East follows low, South wins the spade with the king and plays his carefully-preserved three of trumps to dummy's six, producing this position:

Declarer leads the heart nine from dummy and discards his eight of spades on it! East wins the heart but cannot lead the ace of spades, which would hand South the contract. So he seeks respite by playing the queen of diamonds. Declarer lets East win this trick also, and now there is no escape for East.

"Peter and Fran?" said Jerry. "Well, there's quite a connection with your age."

"What about this, then?" Jerry asked. "There ages are the digits of my age, and my age added to the squares of their ages makes your age."

How old is Jerry?

HOW TO WRITE

A GOOD

CLASSIFIED ACTION

AD

1—IT'S BEST to start your ad with the name of the article or service you have to offer. If you have an apartment, room, etc., for rent, or property for sale, start your ad with the location.

2—BE CLEAR. Readers respond more quickly and favorably by giving complete, definite information. Always include the price in your advertisement.

3—MAKE IT EASY for the reader prospect to reach you. Always give your telephone number or your name and address. If you do not have regular hours, state a preferred time for the prospect to get in touch with you.

4—PLAY SAFE. You get the greatest reader attention by using consecutive insertions. A six-day order is best and costs less, and you can, of course, stop your ad as soon as you get the results you want. You pay only for the days your ad appeared. Lower yearly rates are available to those who wish to keep their services or products before the public.

5—PLACE YOURSELF in the reader's position and ask yourself what you want to know about your offer. The answer you give will make a good Want Ad.

6—GIVE YOUR PROSPECT every inducement you can with good copy. Classified action ad readers have the money and are already interested in buying the merchandise or service you have to offer; the details and information you give are the most important.

7—TO PLACE YOUR AD, call 386-2121, your direct line number to fast Want Ad action. A courteous, efficient advisor will be glad to help you word and place your order. And remember, Classified Action Ads afford you the most complete coverage. Telephones are open 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Friday, 8:00 to 5:30 p.m. Saturday. Don't allow the reader to speculate.

He leadeth me beside the still waters
He restoreth my soul
He leadeth me in the path of righteousness for his name sake
Yea though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death
I will fear no evil
For thou art with me, thy rod and thy staff they comfort me
Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies
Thou anointest my head with oil
My cup runneth over
Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life and I will dwell in the House of the Lord forever.

Glory-of-the-Snow

GARDENING

hilda beastall

Just now there is blooming a delightful, small bulb that Easterners know as Glory-of-the-Snow, for its sky-blue little flowers force a pathway upwards through the melting snow of late April to the delight of winter-weary eyes.

Here in our coastal gardens we see it well before the middle of March even if there is a scattering of snow in sight.

As several flowering stems come from one small bulb the season lasts well into April, making a pleasing base for daffodils of all shades and forms. Or it naturalizes freely and informally. The listed name for this small bulb is Chionodoxa luciliae.

The bulbs are planted in early fall where sun reaches to encourage spring growth. Flowers are on four- to five-inch stems and are borne singly amid the narrow shining green foliage. Each sky-blue starry blossom has a white centre which focuses attention on the flower.

Useful from the average home gardener's viewpoint is the free production of seeds when allowed to ripen on the plants.

The bulbs also increase generously without noticeably diminishing the flower display, so there is soon a scattering of new bulbs nearby coming into bloom. Seedlings appear in grassed areas if not cut too early in spring, and among shrubs, and at edges of concrete or gravelled paths — all annoying to the tidy gardener but a delight to the plant lover.

I suppose one could gather seedpods before they open and sow the mature seeds where wanted. This would need daily checking from about two weeks after the last flowers fade in order that pods are gathered just as the cases show signs of drying and splitting.

I would put the pods into a closed brown paper bag indoors where sun shines in; the bag will catch the seeds when the pods finally split to release them.

The seeds could then be sown in a special little spot and barely covered with soil. With protection from interference by twiggy branches, there should be a flower or two in three years.

Blue bulbous flowers are numerous in spring. Another that comes along in May belongs to the Scillas. The easiest is Scilla hispanica, usually sold as S. campanulata.

English gardeners call this the English Bluebell which grows wild in England in woodland making a blue carpet against the bright green of its long narrow leaves. But it is really another species of Scilla.

The sturdy stems of S. hispanica (or S. campanulata) grow to eight- or 10-inch height, with the top half crowded with bells.

Allow the leaves to wither naturally, then rake off gently and do just surface cultivating through summer to avoid disturbing established bulbs.

Seeds and seedlings will be moved around a bit in the process but many will take root and in time flower to extend the blueness.

Ski-Warning Fines Urged

WHISTLER (CP) — A coroner's jury said Thursday the provincial government should initiate legislation and a public awareness campaign aimed at cutting down on the number of people who do not obey avalanche warnings.

The jury ruled that the recent death of Douglas Norman Robinson, 22, on Whistler Mountain was the skier's own fault. Robinson's body was found in an area hit by an avalanche.

The jury said people caught skiing beyond safety boundaries should perhaps be fined.

K-Cycle Engine in Spotlight

COMBUSTION CHAMBER

Winnipeg inventor Hoken Kristiansen displays his engine

WINNIPEG (CP) — Hoken Kristiansen, inventor of an engine which provides 50 per cent more gas mileage, will be a key participant next month when automobile industry and U.S. government representatives meet in Washington, D.C., to discuss financing for new engine research.

The Winnipeg inventor's K-cycle engine is being called the first new engine cycle of this century and more advanced that any other.

He caught the attention of government and industry scientists at a February conference in Boston where he described his engine which weighs half as much as a standard automobile engine and gives better gas mileage.

The conference of top industrial and academic researchers was organized by U.S. transportation secretary Brock Adams to help set technical standards for the fuel-economy and pollution requirements.

The scientists were told the U.S. government wants cars to average 80 kilometres to the U.S. gallon (which is four-fifths of a Canadian gallon) by the end of this century. That's impossible with existing technology, but Kristiansen may be leading the way to cleaner, cheaper travel.

Both K-cycle and commonly-used Otto-cycle combustion engines operate on four strokes — intake, compression, power and exhaust.

But all four strokes of the Otto-cycle unit are the same length while the power and exhaust strokes of the K-cycle are much longer than the intake and compression strokes. This results in improved fuel use and cooler, cleaner exhaust.

Kristiansen formed his own research company, K-Cycle Engines Ltd., to develop and test prototype engines. Much of the work has been done in co-operation with the University of Manitoba engineering faculty.

The staff of the company has grown in five years to 25, including 20 engineers and technicians. Some work is financed by a National Research Council grant, but most of the money has come from people investing in shares.

"They're ordinary folks, the salt of the earth," says secretary-treasurer L. J. Sinnott. "We're going to justify their faith in us."

To make the K-cycle pay, the company has signed licensing agreements with European and Japanese engine companies. The big three automobile manufacturers — General Motors, Ford and Chrysler — are major North American targets.

Sinnott said in an interview that the companies are interested, but cautious: "They've seen all kinds of so-called miracle inventions over the years."

He said that in the past rights to some inventions have been bought and shelved for years. This will not happen to the K-cycle because the research company is basing its long-term plans on the sale of licensing agreements.

He is convinced the K-cycle engine will eventually break into the North American market because of government pressure for improved fuel economy.

Conversion of existing engine plants will not be a major problem for the car companies, mainly because the K-cycle will be easier and cheaper to produce.

"But it's up to the industry . . . Our company is solely engaged in research and development."

Kurds Begin Pull-Out

Times News Services

TEHRAN — Iranian troops under siege in the western city of Sanandaj handed over 186 Kurdish prisoners to the rebel tribesmen today and the insurgents agreed to pull out of the area, Tehran radio said.

The agreement came after Ayatollah Khomeini's chief mediator in the four-day Kurdish feud with the army garrison talked to the tribal leaders and gave them assurances of greater authority, reports reaching Tehran said.

Tehran radio gave no details, saying only the two sides talked "in complete understanding" and agreement on ending the siege had been implemented.

UPI photographer Javad Bijarchian in Sanandaj, 318 miles west of Tehran, gunmen still roamed the streets but said the soldiers were able to come out to the base, which had been under siege, without out being shot at.

He also reported that the town was gradually returning to normal after the bloody fighting that killed more than 500 people, according to unofficial figures.

Ayatollah Taleghani, leader of Khomeini's mediation team in the city, addressed the Kurds in the main sports stadium. Then he visited the wounded in the largest town hospital.

He appealed to the Kurds for unity. "This is not the time for slogans, or arguments," he said. " Roll your sleeves up and resume work. We're right now in the reconstruction stage. Every man and woman is needed."

He promised to replace any revolutionary officials whom the population did not want.

Meanwhile, Iran's Revolutionary Council has drafted a constitution to provide a strong U.S.-style president elected by universal suffrage excluding federal statehood sought by regional autonomists such as the rebellious Kurds.

The first description of Iran's Islamic republic emerged from separate interviews with the two officials considered to be the closest to Khomeini.

There is every reason to believe that both U.S.-educated figures are members of the Revolutionary Council, whose membership is still secret.

Both men expressed confidence that Iranians would approve the formation of the Islamic republic by more than 90 per cent.

Squeeze Tightens On Idi

NAIROBI (UPI) — A Tanzanian invasion force captured a third important town in southern Uganda and inched closer to the capital city of Kampala despite a ceasefire appeal by Yugoslav President Josip Tito, diplomatic sources said today.

Ugandan exile groups ranging from monarchists to Marxists gathered in the northern Tanzania town of Moshi for a private meeting to co-ordinate efforts to topple President Idi Amin and prepare a blueprint for Uganda's post-war future.

Journalists were banned by the Tanzanian government from attending the meeting in the shadow of Africa's largest mountain, Kilimanjaro, and delegates were urged not to release any details of the meeting — the boldest political step to date by the exiles to end Amin's eight-year reign.

Diplomatic sources said the 4,000-man invasion force of regular Tanzanian troops and exile guerrillas captured the town of Kasese, 120 miles west of Kampala near Uganda's rugged Mountains of the Moon.

The attackers have already seized some 5,000-square miles of southern Uganda, including the towns of Masaka and Mbarara.

While the western prong of the attacking force took Kasese, a town with a military garrison and an airbase, the main Tanzanian force continued to move steadily along the main highway toward Kampala, these sources said.

Callaghan Prepared To Face House Defeat

Times News Services

LONDON — Britain's minority Labor government agreed today to submit to a parliamentary censure vote expected to topple it and compel Prime Minister James Callaghan to hold a spring general election.

Leader of the House of Commons Michael Foot announced the vote will be held next Wednesday night.

If, as British commentators predict almost unanimously, the government is defeated, Callaghan will have to order dissolution of Parliament and set a date for a general election.

The earliest likely date was April 26, but political informants said May 3 or May 10 were more probable.

The political crisis erupted suddenly Thursday evening when the Conservatives submitted a brief Commons motion declaring that "this House has no confidence in Her Majesty's government."

They did so after the 11 Scottish Nationalists earlier had submitted a "no confidence" motion of their own and after behind-scenes soundings indicated most, if not all, the 37 lawmakers representing small splinter parties for once would join the Conservatives in voting against the government.

Although much more wooing of the minor party votes is certain to take place over the weekend, it appeared Thursday night that Conservative leader Margaret Thatcher may well have convinced enough of them join the 305 Conservative, Liberal and Scottish Nationalist members to defeat Callaghan.

Great Illusionists Perform

Shari Lewis and Lambchop are hosts to an international cast of the world's greatest illusionists in Magic, an hour of music and fantasy telecasting Tuesday, March 27 at 7 p.m. on Channel 8.

Among the performers will be illusionists Mark Wilson, The Great Tomsoni & Co.; Flip and The Amazing Randi, and Karen Kain and Frank Augustyn of the National Ballet of Canada.

The world's greatest magicians weave their magic spell from the stage of the National Arts Centre in Ottawa. Canada's Amazing Randi, the world' greatest escape artist, attempts Harry Houdini's dangerous milk can escape; American Mark Wilson levitates his beautiful assistant who disappears into thin air; the mime artistry of Holland's Flip draws ooh's and aah's from the crowd; and the Great Tomsoni & Co. from the United States, delights and perplexes with his magical comedy.

The premiere of a specially created magical ballet by Brian MacDonald, Beauty and the Beast, is performed with precision and beauty by Karen Kain and Frank Augustyn of the National Ballet of Canada.

Shari Lewis, who learned the art of magic from her father — Peter Pan The Magic Man, the official magician for the city of New York — demonstrates her talents as a magician, turning water to wine and back to water again. Shair's versatility as an entertainer includes the creation of the endearing Lambchop, her artistry as a magician as well as her abilities as a dancer and singer. Shari displays her musical talents in the opening number Magic and, with Billy Van, spoofs the comic strip Mandrake the Magician.

WHA Accepts

WINNIPEG (CP) — Radio station CJOB says the World Hockey Association has accepted terms for merger with the National League.

The station said the acceptance will mean Winnipeg Jets, Edmonton Oilers, Quebec Nordiques and New England Whalers will join the NHL next season.

Under terms of the merger worked out at meetings in Chicago, the WHA teams agree to pay a $6 million entry fee, $1.5 million each in indemnity payments to Cincinnati Stingers and Birmingham Bulls and $1.5 million each in working capital.

Each WHA team would be allowed to protect two skaters and two goalies and any players whose rights are owned by NHL teams will become the property of those teams.

By MARK HUME
Times Staff

Bennett said his government will not stand by and idly watch the loggers prosecuted.

"I can't say too strongly that this government will fight on behalf of those people asking, demanding, that the federal government drop the charges," said Bennett.

The premier's tough talk came as the International Woodworkers of America renewed threats of a province-wide walkout to protest the arrests and fisheries officers charged three more fallers.

Fisheries also moved to put a prohibited tract of timber under 24-hour guard.

The fallers, all employees of Q.C. Timber Ltd., were arrested as they cut trees in a 40-acre stand of timber that was put off limits by fisheries about two weeks ago.

Since Monday 11 men have been arrested by fisheries officers.

Forests Minister Tom Waterland said it is "completely unfair" that loggers at the site are being arrested when there are other courses of action that could be taken.

"If they want it to come before the courts, then they should do that directly rather than through arresting individual workmen."

Ben Thompson, Vancouver-based president of the Queen Charlotte IWA local, said word of the situation is being spread to union offices around the province and the liklihood of a province-wide protest walkout is growing.

"They're flabbergasted," said Thompson when asked to describe the general reaction of IWA members.

Meanwhile, in Ottawa, Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc said that he regrets the breakdown of the consultative process that led to the arrest of the loggers.

But the minister said that when fishery and forestry experts can't resolve an issue "then I'm afraid the powers given to this department under the Fisheries Act . . . have to be invoked."

Speaking from Queen Charlotte City fisheries district supervisor Kip Slater said he is hoping for re-enforcements today to back up the two men now on duty.

He said a guard is being posted on the stream around the clock.

"A lot of people are saying this is a federal-provincial jurisdictional fight," said Slater. "But really it's simply fish habitat versus poor logging practices."

Oscar Contest Details

Two lucky people are as good as on their way to Hollywood for an expense-paid weekend via CP Air.

The fortunate ones will be the winners of this year's Victoria Times-VI90 radio station Visit the Stars in Hollywood contest which starts today. The top prize includes two nights at a luxury hotel and a tour of the Universal Studio.

As in past years, readers who correctly predict the Oscar winners for best picture, best actress and best actor for Academy Awards night April 9 will have a chance to win the Hollywood trip or one of five runner-up prizes of a night on the town, including dinner for two at The Empress and two tickets to the Towne Cinema theatre.

In addition, there will be about 300 free movie tickets awarded to attend a Towne Cinema showing of a new George C. Scott film Movie, Movie and to watch the ceremonial drawing for the major prizes. These prizes will be announced on VI90 and the winners notified by mail.

Contestants must have the right answers to be eligible to win the grand prize or the five major runner-up awards (and they do not have to be present at the drawing to win), while everyone who enters the contest, whether they have the correct answers or not, will have a chance to win one of the 300 free theatre tickets.

The drawing for top and runner-up prizes will take place at the Towne Cinema on Wednesday, April 11, two days after Academy Awards night, at a matinee starting at 2 p.m.

The nominees are:

Cabinet Records Opened to Probe

OTTAWA (CP) — The government is giving a royal commission into RCMP wrongdoing access to records of cabinet and cabinet committee meetings, it was announced today.

An order-in-council tabled in the Commons by Solicitor-General Jean-Jacques Blais set out the rules for such access.

The royal commissioners will be allowed to read the minutes on any cabinet or cabinet committee meeting which they have reasonable and probable grounds to believe would provide evidence of unauthorized or illegal RCMP activity.

The cabinet order requires Cabinet Secretary Michael Pitfield to deliver to the royal commission any document the commissioners believe contains evidence.

However if the commissioners want to make any such document public, they must first ask Pitfield to declassify it. Such documents are usually classified as secret.

Pitfield must provide the commissioners with indexes and other information to enable them to determine what minutes of meetings they want to see.

To get minutes of meetings during the period that John Diefenbaker was prime minister, from 1957 to 1963, Diefenbaker must give permission in writing to Pitfield.

The royal commission under Mr. Justice David C. McDonald of Alberta has stumbled across some cabinet documents in RCMP files to which the commissioners have had free access.

RCMP witnesses have said that the government directed the force to investigate not only subversion but also separatism, and was aware the Mounties had to skirt the law or break it to do this.

However, the commission has been unable to get at cabinet documents that might support or oppose this view.

The commission was forced behind closed doors last November to question senior RCMP witnesses about cabinet documents because such documents had not been declassified.

The declassification process has been under way and some of these documents may be made public next week.

U.S. Prices Up

18 SFU Pickets Arrested

BURNABY (CP) — Eighteen persons were arrested Thursday in a confrontation between RCMP officers and a union picket line on the road approaching Simon Fraser University in Burnaby.

A police spokesman said the 14 men and four women were taken to the RCMP detachment but were later released while police drafted charges of obstruction. The spokesman said those arrested were told to appear in provincial court April 25.

Meanwhile, Labor Minister Allan Williams said today the provincial government will not act under the terms of essential services legislatio to end the labor dispute.

The minister said in an interview university services are not being disrupted to the point where government intervention is warranted.

Williams criticized John Fryer, general secretary of the B.C. Government Employees Union, for his actions Thursday which preceeded an attempt by union members to block a road leading to the university in Burnaby.

The BCGEU leader spoke around noon to a crowd of about 200 people gathered on the roadway expressing support for the union's fight.

At the end of his speech he said the only way the employees were going to win their fight was to prevent everyone from getting to the university.

Striking members of the Association of University and College Employees then linked arms and blocked incoming traffic.

Police were called and a noisy, heated confrontation ensued.

An observer said police used a loudhailer to warn the pickets to stop blocking traffic, and when that failed, the officers began charging the crowd. Some of the demonstrators put up passive resistance and were dragged off the road by the hair, he said.

The 650 union members union have been on strike for two weeks in a dispute over a new contract.

Jerusalem Blast Injures 15

Times News Services

The explosion occurred just hours after Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin took off for the United States for Monday's signing of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty.

Meanwhile, U.S. President Jimmy Carter, in an Egyptian TV interview screened today, warned that threats of punitive action against Egypt by Arab hardliners opposed to the treaty run contrary to the interests of the Palestinian people.

He also reiterated the U.S. would deal directly with the PLO if the latter recognized Israel's right to exist.

ESP Beats God for Believers

TORONTO (CP) — A university student doing research into superstitions and beliefs has found that more of the Metropolitan Toronto residents interviewed believe in extra-sensory perception than in God.

Laura Otis, a graduate student at York University, said the study shows 85 per cent of the 713 persons interviewed believe in ESP. Seventy-three per cent believe in God.

Persons interviewed even have stronger feelings about the Bermuda Triangle and hypnosis than the existence of God.

Miss Otis, 29, said she set out to learn in which superstitions, psychic phenomena, religious traditions and spirits people believe. She also wanted to compare views of the general public with those of university students and professors.

She found the public and students hold similar views, but that professors appear the most skeptical — only 33 per cent of them believe in ESP, compared with 80 per cent of the students and 85 per cent of the public.

Twenty-six per cent of the professors believe in God, compared with 57 per cent of the students and 73 per cent of the public. Forty-three per cent of the public believe in heaven or hell and 61 per cent believe in life after death.

"I can't say that education leads to skepticism," Miss Otis said. "But the academics were more skeptical on all 48 items."

Most credulous are English professors, Miss Otis said. The only time scientists were more credulous was when they were asked about the Loch Ness Monster and the Abominable Snowman — zoology professors are more inclined to believe these creatures really exists, the study shows.

The study of extraordinary beliefs in the community also showed that men and women are equally superstitious and that the old and young answer questions similarly.

Miss Otis said she chose commonly-known superstitions or phenomena so there would be answers to every question on the survey. Previous studies have dealt almost exclusively with students, with the aim to show that education eradicates superstitions.

Refugee Procedures Change

OTTAWA (CP) — Changes in refugee application procedures that have been recently criticized as unjust were announced by the government Thursday.

However, the changes announced by Immigration Minister Bud Cullen did not include the key demand of critics — to give rejected refugee applicants a virtually automatic right to an oral appeal hearing.

Otherwise, the changes meet nearly every request made last week by a 20-member delegation of church, legal, medical, labor and humanitarian rights organization members.

The changes will require the government to tell unsuccessful applicants why they are rejected. Until now, they have not been told.

They can correct errors or add information to the transcript which is used by a refugee advisory board to determine whether the person should be allowed to stay in Canada.

The critics say errors, omissions and faulty translations in the transcripts have been contributing to unfair treatment of applicants. Cullen promised to review translation services and to recommend improvements by the end of May.

The applicant will be able to go through the procedures at the immigration centre nearest his destination instead of having to travel back to the city where he entered Canada.

The applicant's immediate family will automatically be included in the application even if they arrive in the country at different times.

The applicant will be fully informed of how the procedures work and that he has the right to legal counsel. Procedures will be halted so he can get legal help. The government will steer applicants to legal help.

These and other changes in the system ar designed to eliminate many of the reasons the critics say confusion, hardship and unjust circumstances exist for foreigners who claim refugee status after entering Canada — usually as visitors or tourists.

The rules do not affect the thousands of refugees who apply for entry to Canada from foreign abroad.

The critics were unsuccessful in their request for a virtually automatic oral appeal hearing and a request to let foreigners apply for refugee status while they have legal temporary status such as a visitor, tourist or student.

Cullen said the right to appeal is already in the system and that the immigration appeal board, an independent court of record, has the right to give the applicant an oral hearing. He wanted no added red tape.

However, because the appeal board is not holding as many oral hearings as might be expected, the critics' comments have been sent to the board's chairman.

Cullen said that refugee applicants will continue to have to wait until they are illegally in Canada to make their claim. Letting them)pply while they are here legally would require a legislative amendment which "is not contemplated at the present."

Gun Survey Confidential: Blais

OTTAWA (FP) — Information being obtained from Canadians about the number and type of guns in their households through a telephone survey will be kept "strictly confidential," Solicitor General Jean Jacques Blais assured the Commons Thursday.

He told the House that questions about guns and other crime prevention measures taken by families were being asked to determine the impact of a media advertising campaign in reducing the crime rate.

Conservative MP Eldon Woolliams (Calgary North) wanted assurances that people who admitted to researchers they had unregistered handguns would not have their names turned over to the police to be charged under the new gun control law.

Blais said the questions about household guns and nothing to do with a separate research study into the impact of the gun control legislation, also being financed by his department.

Boycott Bill Fails To Get Unanimity

OTTAWA (CP) — A surprise attempt by the government to ram through its lingering anti-Arab boycott legislation in one day was blocked Thursday by two opposition MPs.

Edmonton Conservative William Skoreyko and Leonard Jones, an independent from Moncton, N.B., denied the unanimous consent needed for the House to waive procedural rules and speed the bill through by Thursday night.

It now appears the anti-boycott legislation, an important issue in key Toronto ridings in the forthcoming election, may be passed next Tuesday.

The bill was introduced in a flourish of publicity last December but has been sitting neglected on the order paper since then.

The government and opposition showed renewed interest in it this week when a controversy developed over similar, but harsher legislation in Ontario.

Each side has accused the other of blocking swift passage of the bill, which would require Canadian companies doing business with Arab countries and asked to comply with an Arab boycott against Isreal to report it to the government.

Deputy Prime Minister Allan MacEachen caught the opposition off guard Thursday when he proposed that the legislation be pushed through by the end of the day.

JONES

Progressive Conservative House Leader Walter Baker had suggested minutes earlier that the bill be passed next Tuesday but went along with the surprise suggestion by MacEachen.

Asked why he had denied unanimous consent, Jones told a reporter "I'm from a railroad town but I don't agree with railroading legislation." He was miffed that no one had consulted him about the plan.

"If the bill's so important why didn't they move on it three months ago."

Skoreyko said he withheld his consent because his party intended to move amendments to the bill and would have had difficulty doing it Thursday.

Baker said in a letter to MacEachen his party wants to increase the proposed $250-a-day fines for companies complying with the boycott and to alter reporting regulations.

MacEachen said he was prepared to proceed with the bill next Tuesday and would talk with opposition leaders to see if it could be arranged.

Controversy over the issue developed this week when a Saudi Arabian official said Ontario's legislation, which prohibits compliance with the Arab boycott, was leading to tighter visa rules for businessmen travelling to his country.

Industry Minister Jack Horner stirred it up more when he said the Ontario legislation "goes much further than they intended" and was costing sales to oil-rich Saudi Arabia.

Jewish groups have said the proposed federal legislation isn't strong enough and Liberal Herb Gray (Windsor West) has been a leading spokesmen on their behalf.

Barney Danson, defence minister and only Jewish member of the cabinet, has said the federal bill is a more sensible approach than Ontario's with "more substance and less bravado."

Museum Denies 'Medalling'

OTTAWA (CP) — A London war medal dealer's complaints about medal-trading practices of the Canadian War Museum are sour grapes says a museum spokesman.

John Lormoro said Thursday that J. B. Hayward and Son's claims that the museum sold unawarded Canada General Service, Distinguished Conduct and Military Medals were "competely false.

"We trade médals with the department of veterans affairs and private collectors but we do not sell them," Lomoro said in an interview.

He said Haywards, which the museum had turned down as an auction representative, may merely be angry about having paid an unprecedented $40,000 for a group of medals won by a Canadian during the First World War.

That CPR Course A Real Lifesaver

On Dec. 11, David Thom, 74, of 3750 Carey Road, was walking across Douglas Street at Ravine Way when he collapsed in the centre of the road.

Fortunately for Thom, Trevor Bedea and Al Ingeber, both of Sooke, were driving in their truck and saw him fall.

A safety technician, Bedea had served a five-year stint with the Canadian navy and during that time had taken an industrial first aid course.

He realized that Thom had had a cardiac arrest. "He died standing on his feet," Bedea told the Times this week.

Also driving north at the time was Greg Martell of 4127 Birtles, who was an orderly at the Royal Jubilee Hospital for 14 years and is now with the hospital's building services department.

He, too, stopped to help Thom. The two men worked together, using the skills and knowledge which Martell had gained last April when he took a CPR (Cardiopulmonary Resuscitiation) course at the Saanich firehall on Vernon Avenue.

"I took the CPR course last April and six months later this happened," Martell told the Times, as he sat taking the recommended annual refresher course at the firehall.

Before the Emergency Health Services ambulance had arrived Thom had a second cardiac arrest but, working as a team, Martell and Bedea were able to hand over Thom unconscious but alive.

"The last thing I knew I was in the hospital," Thom said. "It's pretty wonderful that there are people who can do this and take care of you."

Mrs. Thom said she was particulary grateful and impressed because of the growing tendency in society for people to mind their own business.

Saanich firefighter Neil Duckworth, however, says more and more people are taking the CPR course in order to be able to help others in case of emergency.

Duckworth is co-ordinator and instructor for the CPR course which is part of the required training for Saanich firefighters. This is the second year it has been available to the general public.

About 700 people from all walks of life —housewives, dentists, college students and others — have taken the 3½-hour course since it has been available.

The course begins with a 30-minute film, made by the American Heart Association. Duckworth explains that Canada and the United States use the same methods to help ensure co-ordination of emergency treatment for people on the North American continent.

The film outlines the techniques, after which the students practise those techniques on dummies until they have mastered them. The course ends with a 40-question written examination.

By phoning Duckworth at the firehall —388-5531— applicants can be fitted into courses at times that will be suitable.

The latest crop of students had an extra bonus when Martell and Bedea joined them to show how it had helped them to become Good Samaritans.

TOWN TALK

Did somebody goof or was it deliberate that Liberal leader Jev Tothill didn't get an invitation to sit as a special guest on the floor of the legislature at Thursday's opening?

Granted Tothill isn't an MLA but he's a party leader — and as such represents a considerable number of British Columbians — who'll be running in the May 31 byelection in North Vancouver-Seymour.

Looking down on the floor you could see the old familar faces — the business types, the Socred allies and big labor representatives.

But no Tothill. He wound up watching from the public gallery and Town Talk is told, was lucky to even get in there.

We say chintzy, chintzy.

Ever since he returned from a recent holiday to China Victoria Ald. Bob Wright has been something of an expert on that country. He flaunted his knowledge once again at Thursday night's council meeting when Ald. John Hayes was making a speach in defence of the city's continued use of 2,4-D as a weed control.

Hayes said if the parks crew stops using the spray, dandelions will run rampant. Then he added, tongue in cheek: "Maybe we should get rid of them the way the Chinese got rid of flies, by killing everyone they saw."

Replied Wright: "Don't kid yourself, I was over there, and they're back!"

When is a secret not a secret?

That's what we'd like to know following Forest Minister Tom Waterland's press release this week which attacked Sierra Club spokesman Bob Nixon.

The Times had used that same word to describe the report.

Waterland argued it wasn't "secret" because it had been distributed to a number of selected agencies — mostly government.

Turning to Webster's dictionary for some help we find a secret is really "something kept from the knowledge of others or shared only confidentially with a few."

Sorry, Tom, but we think your report qualifies . . . or at least it did until it got into the paper this week.

Town Talk echoes the sentiments of all Times' staff in wishing a speedy recovery to "colleague-across-the-hall" Gorde Hunter who is languishing in Royal Jubilee Hospital.

The acerbic Colonist columnist went in for tests Thursday after a brief spell of feeling under the weather.

Listen, Gorde, the office wags suspect it was the weather — and too much golf — but everyone wishes you a speedy recovery.

There's a young lad out in the Gordon Head area doing quite nicely, it seems, selling ballpoint pens at 4 for $1, ostensibly on behalf of the Deaf and Hard of Hearing Institute.

The youngster is trudging around with a big box of pens — which don't mention the institute by name — giving a plaintive pitch which has apparently moved a goodly number of homeowners to cough up cash for the handicapped.

One lady got nabbed the other night and only later thought to phone the institute just to double-check that everything was on the up-and-up.

An institute spokesman told her its annual fund drive doesn't occur until May, the canvassers have proper ID and the youngster in question is on his own and not, repeat not, representing the institute.

Mini-Revolution Greets Couvelier on Parking

Rumblings of a mini-revolt and a weary get-your-facts-straight comments today greeted Saanich Mayor Mel Couvelier's suggestion that municipal employees and Camosun College students be made to pay for parking privileges.

Municipal hall staff are fuming over the mayor's comments, an employee said, while a member of the Camosun College board pointed out that a decision has already been made to establish student parking fees.

Board member Peter Dorazio also noted that several other avenues have been explored to encourage students to use alternative means of transportation.

"I do wish he (Couvelier) had checked with Camosun College first," Dorazio added.

At the municipal hall the No. 1 topic of conversation this morning was the mayor's statement that the parking "frill" be eliminated to encourage better use of public transit.

Couvelier said Thursday he was opposed to the recommendation in a report that more land be blacktopped to provide additional parking spaces.

"It's the principle that concerns me," he said. "On the basis that we are paying our people top dollar, I'm opposed to continuing the practice of providing free parking."

A spokesman for Local 374 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees declined comment until the matter has been discussed by the local's executive.

But an employee (who preferred for obvious reasons not to be identified) said staff reaction is unanimously indignant.

He said many employees live a considerable distance from the hall, some as far away as Colwood, and cars are their only practical form of transportation.

For most of the 150 employees at the municipal hall public transportation is out of the question because only a couple of routes serve the area, he said.

"We work in the opposite direction from the public transportation lines" feeding the downtown area, the employee added.

"We could travel by bus but how long would it take — an hour or more? To suggest staff get up at 6.30 a.m. for an 8.30 starting time at the office is a little ridiculous."

He said if Saanich starts charging its employees for parking they will clog up Darwin and other roads in the area, as well as the parking lot at the Town and Country shopping centre.

As for Camosun College, Dorazio said if the mayor had bothered to check he would have found out that the board's decision on paid parking was made about a month ago.

The board has also examined such initiatives as registered car pools, securable covered bike stalls and a substantial board subsidy of up to $25 per student per semester for bus passes, he said.

The board is asking Saanich to relax its parking requirements so that only about five acres of additional college parking need be provided in the nearby Hudson's Bay Wood, not 8.5 acres.

The use of the woodland for that purpose has generated fierce opposition.

But Dorazio said the board believes it has done everything it can to reduce the need for parking there. "The pressure on the woods is minimal right now," he added.

Crowded Conservatory Gets St. Ann's Annex

Although government spokesman won't confirm it, the Times has learned that the annex of St.Ann's Academy is to be made available as the conservatory's future home.

With its more than 1,200 students and faculty and staff of 100, the conservatory has been struggling against impossibly crowded conditions at Craigdarroch Castle.

St.Ann's annex, a substantial building behind the original building on Academy Close, designed by prominent Victoria architect John Di Castri, will provide the conservatory with approximately twice its present space, says Winifred Wood, vice principal of the conservatory which is headed by her husband, Robin Wood.

She says the decision has come just in time to avert a serious crisis in conservatory affairs.

"So many valuable programs simply cannot be developed under the present crowded conditions," she says.

"Some of our excellent faculty members have reached a point of frustration that could mean their loss to us next year if teaching conditions are not improved."

The original St.Ann's building is considerably larger than the annex but it is in extremely poor condition, requiring expenditure in the neighborhood of two or three million dollars before being suitable for major occupancy.

Handicapped Win Battle For Own Home

Rezoning to permit a Redfern Street house to become a group home for mentally handicapped is a forward step in the struggle for recognition, a spokesman for the handicapped said today.

Victoria council Thursday approved the rezoning of a former private residence allowing it to be used by the Capital Region for the Mentally Handicapped, which sought to have eight members and two staff reside there.

Council adopted an Advisory Planning Commission recommendation limiting the capacity to six members and two staff, but endorsed the principle of housing handicapped in a residential area.

APC said this particular house, with small yard and lack of screening or parking space was unsuitable for the larger number of persons.

Elly Bowerman, chairman of Handicapped Action Committee, said those who objected to the proposal were unjustified. "Down through the years, handicapped have proven to be good tenants."

She also said she had mixed feelings on the limitation to six residents and two staff, realizing there have to be zoning regulations. But any persons living in a family unit should have the same rights as non-handicapped families.

"Do we state to a family, 'you can have no more than six children'?"

Ald. Bob Wright failed in a move that would have forced the CRMH to increase the privacy of the building through landscaping changes.

The Redfern issue has sparked some heated debate in the past and neighbors on the street have complained that if the group home goes ahead it will drive down property values.

Ald. Bill McElroy said the Redfern situation presented a very tough problem for council because "Anyone opposed to this has been painted as a red-neck and I think this is very unfair."

He said he sympathized with the CRMH but felt the original proposal for ten adults would have created obvious overcrowding and even eight was pushing it.

Ald. Robin Blencoe said that "If it was two parents moving in there with eight children we wouldn't say anything."

Bar Pushes Free Information Law

The Canadian Bar Association has called on its 25,000 members to press governments into passing freedom of information legislation.

Bar president Tom Walsh said Thursday the association will be asking its members, and in particular the 64 Members of Parliament who are lawyers, to "use every kind of pressure we can to get governments in Canada to get this type of legislation."

Walsh said it is vital "to find out what the bureaucrats are doing," but noted that at present citizens have virtually no right of access to government information.

"This is a fundamental issue important to all Canadians," he said. "The veil of secrecy that surrounds governments at all levels interferes with the inherent rights of individuals in a democratic society."

Walsh, in Victoria to attend a national conference on the freedom of information issue, made the comments at a press conference during which he released a model freedom of information bill prepared by a special committee of the association.

Said committee chairman Peter Grant of Toronto: "It's a bill whose time has come. We've been waiting months and years for it."

Walsh said he hoped the model bill will foster debate and encourage governments into acting.

"Judging from its track record to date, if we waited for the present government to come up with meaningful legislation we'd be waiting for another 10 years," he said.

The special bar committee, which included Professor Murray Rankin of the University of Victoria, spent about eight months drafting the bill.

Wslsh said the bill could serve as a model for federal or provincial legislation. Only two provinces, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia have freedom of information legislation. Ontario has a royal commission on the issue, and British Columbia has been studying the matter for the past 18 months.

Walsh said the bill would give citizens the right to see and copy all government information except in six narrowly defined areas — cabinet records, policy advice, national defence, law enforcement and legal proceedings, personal privacy, and certain commercial and financial information.

It would open the door for public access to all task force reports, environmental impact studies, inspection reports, and the like which are suppressed by the various government departments.

The model bill would take precedence over all other acts including the Official Secrets Act, and would create an office of information commissioner to advise and mediate for citizens.

Citizens denied information could appeal to the courts.

The bill proposes prison sentences of up to five years without the alternative of fines for anyone breaching the legislation, however there would no action taken against an official who denies information in good faith.

Grant said the bill differs from the federal government's green paper on the subject in two major aspects. It suggests the courts — not the ministers — should be the final arbiters in deciding what information should be released. And it narrows the list of exemptions.

He noted the essential features of the model bill have already received unanimous approval by all parties.

But he could not venture an opinion why the government has failed to act.

"Once a government has been in power a few years it seems terribly reluctant to open the closet doors."

The conference, which opened Thursday night with a speech by Privacy Commissioner Inger Hansen, winds up today the the University of Victoria.

Great Illusionists Perform

Shari Lewis and Lambchop are hosts to an international cast of the world's greatest illusionists in Magic, an hour of music and fantasy telecasting Tuesday, March 27 at 7 p.m. on Channel 8.

Among the performers will be illusionists Mark Wilson, The Great Tomsoni & Co., Flip and The Amazing Randi, and Karen Kain and Frank Augustyn of the National Ballet of Canada.

The world's greatest magicians weave their magic spell from the stage of the National Arts Centre in Ottawa. Canada's Amazing Randi, the world' greatest escape artist, attempts Harry Houdini's dangerous milk can escape; American Mark Wilson levitates his beautiful assistant who disappears into thin air; the mime artistry of Holland's Flip draws ooh's and aah's from the crowd; and the Great Tomsoni & Co. from the United States, delights and perplexes with his magical comedy.

The premiere of a specially created magical ballet by Brian MacDonald, Beauty and the Beast, is performed with precision and beauty by Karen Kain and Frank Augustyn of the National Ballet of Canada.

Shari Lewis, who learned the art of magic from her father — Peter Pan The Magic Man, the official magician for the city of New York — demonstrates her talents as a magician, turning water to wine and back to water again. Shair's versatility as an entertainer includes the creation of the endearing Lambchop, her artistry as a magician as well as her abilities as a dancer and singer. Shari displays her musical talents in the opening number Magic and, with Billy Van, spoofs the comic strip Mandrake the Magician.

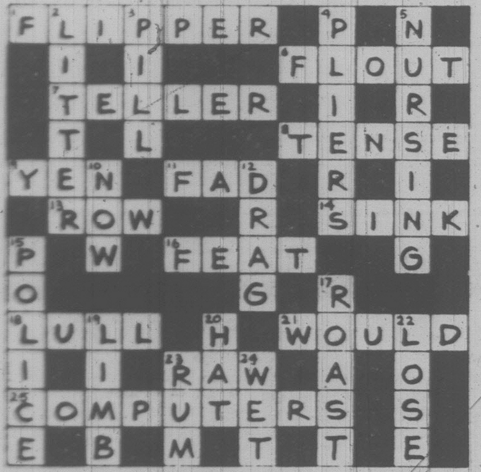
—PAYOFF PUZZLE—

Correct Answers to Last Week's Puzzle



CLUES ACROSS

1. FLIPPER not slipper. In hospital, etc., it is common enough for one slipper to be worn (the other foot having bandages, etc.). It is difficult to imagine much point in using just one frogman's FLIPPER.
7. TELLER not taller. The question of "ambition" could very well relate to a banking career, favoring TELLER. Also, since any boy can expect to become more or less taller anyway, the question is one of a boy wising to be tall, rather than of merely becoming taller than he is already.
8. TENSE not sense. Since the clue specifies "verb," TENSE is more particularly apt; all words have sense.
9. YEN not sen or Zen. "Sen" (obsolete Japanese coin) and "Zen" (Japanese Buddhist sect) are not exactly popular words.
11. FAD not lad. The clue suits something worthy of mild disapproval, but not to be viewed too seriously. FAD is apt, but why should one look down at all on a harmless little lad?
13. ROW not rot. ROW (quarreling, shouting, etc.) is indisputable, but the "rot" is nonsense only to the speakers' political opponents, so it can't be said definitely "to be heard."
14. SINK not sing. In the case of SINK, aptly, there could be some question of trying to "understand" criminal motives or thinking. In the case of sing, one simply accepts that certain men happen to have deep bass voices.
16. FEAT not fear. As distinct from loss of nerve, say, fear is necessary and desirable (as a help towards keeping one alive). A FEAT can be a problem, of course.
21. WOULD not could. As a pianist, he definitely WOULD practice; he wouldn't merely pass into a state wherein he could practice if he chose to do so.
25. COMPUTERS not commuters. Commuters are characterized by traveling to and from their work, they don't merely "go to" the business houses in question.

CLUES DOWN

2. LITTER not letter. It is LITTER, rather than a single object such as a letter, that lies "around" some place. Also, the justificatory tone of the clue favors LITTER. (Why shouldn't a letter be on a desk?
4. PLIERS not fliers. The clue suggests something used in the sense of a tool; but fliers can well be seen as doing the job. Also, a flying job (e.g., crop spraying) would be viewed as calling for aircraft, etc., rather than for "fliers."
5. NURSING not cursing. Cursing is something you simply do or you don't; it's not a considered thing.
15. POLICE not policy. The POLICE are to be found "in the country" in question, whereas the policy would be that of the regime and not have a physical location.
17. ROAST not toast. As the clue suggests, a ROAST plus other things does make a proper meal. However, toast would never make a proper meal; even with additions.
20. HAT not mat. Flowers on a HAT would be artificial, i.e., "not the real thing." Flowers on a mat would merely be part of the pattern — neither "real" nor artificial flowers.
22. LOSE not love. The very question of having to "manage without it" arises more particularly in the case of a thing you LOSE.

Soap Opera Scene

Daytime Star Sparkles

By JOHN GOUDAS

John Gabriel, who makes the ladies' hearts flutter each day as Dr. Seneca Beaulac in Ryan's Hope, had been working on an idea for three years, and his determination is finally paying off. John envisioned a talk show for soap opera stars and creators; and last month, "Daytime Star" was unveiled with John as the host.

"I was very much aware of a vast audience of fans who follow the soaps faithfully," said Gabriel, "and I thought there should be a show in which the fans can see their favorite stars as people and not merely as the characters they play."

Gabriel finally got the go-ahead from American International Television, which produced the first three one-hour specials now airing around the country via syndication. The first show, which went on in February, tripled the ratings in the New York area for the time slot, which indicates the validity of John's idea. At present, it looks as if "Daytime Star" may become a daily half hour syndicated show, which would make John Gabriel the most visible star on TV.

"Naturally, the best time for the show would be the morning before the soaps really begin airing," said Gabriel. "That way, we wouldn't be competing with the soaps for attention."

Soap fans, of course, are the most die-hard of all. They write more letters than any others and feel close to the characters they watch on a daily basis. The most avid of the soap fans can spiel off the plot-line of their favorite soaps going back months and, in some cases, years. Daytime Star has a built-in audience.

Apart from his work with Daytime Star and Ryan's Hope, John is developing a nightclub act which he will unveil at New York's Reno Sweeney in late April. He also has two albums coming out. As most of his fans already know, John sings quite well and has a number of musical roles under his belt. Someday he hopes to do an act in Las Vegas where he would be backed up by a large orchestra with all those strings.

John Gabriel

Gabriel, however, isn't as keen about Vegas or even Hollywood as he is about New York, where he works and lives. He had a short span as a contract player at 20th Century-Fox when he was just starting out and the memory that period is no) pleasant. He will see some of his early film work (in such movies as The Story of Ruth and The Hunters) on the Late Show, and he describes his performances as "photographed fear."

All in all, John Gabriel is a happy man in his career and his marriage (his wife is Sandy Gabriel, who plays Edna Thorton in All My Children).

CHANNEL CHATTER: Pretty Amy Niles, who plays Gina Gaspero in Love of Life, may one day get to raise her lovely soprano voice in song since she has a long list of musical credits ranging from appearances in Carnegie Hall to Broadway . . . Stefan Schnabel (Dr. Stephen Jackson in Guiding Light) has returned from Anchorage, Alaska, where he worked for the Alaska Repertory Theater in a show called "Slow Dance on the Killing Ground." He'll travel anywhere for a good role.

John Tripp has joined the cast of "As the World Turns," in the role of Matt, a young man whom Jay met at a prison farm. Tripp has had some TV experience but this marks his first big break in soap opera . . . Bruce Gray, formerly of the syndicated soap opera High Hopes, produced in Canada, is back on the stage in New York. Gray has a leading role in John Bishop's Winter Signs, with the Circle Repertory Theater Company.

Tudi Wiggins (Meg Hart in Love of Life) is doing some directing these days. She guided At Home, an off-Broadway showcase which will run April 4 and 5 . . . Wayne Tippit (Ted Adamson in Search for Tomorrow) stopped at his favorite gas station on his day off and the attendants were nowhere around. When he searched for them, they were clustered around the small TV set engrossed in the daily trials of — you guessed it — Search for Tomorrow. Needless to say, when they recognized Wayne, he got full "Grade A" service.

A sad note: Ethel Remey (who played Alma Miller in As the World Turns) died last month in New Jersey following complications after a stroke which took her off the show last year.

PLOT PORTENTS: Trish is convinced everyone's against her on Days of Our Lives. We can expect desperate, foolish actions from her in the future. It's also time for a spell of tenderness between Chris and Mary — their periodic spats are beginning to pall. The sparks between Chris and Amanda obviously mean future encounters. Mike and Margo are on a high, following Mickey's offer to make a down payment on the house. If only Margo can stay well for a spell!

Kay Chancellor has at last met her match on The Young and the Restless. Suzanne is using drugs on Kay in the same underhanded way Kay used them on Derek. Too bad, just when Derek was beginning to see Kay in a new light. Jill appears to be desperate — who will make her pregnant? Apparently there are no takers Stuart's letter has given Liz new hope, but she can be counted on to help her daughter in a pinch, sacrificing herself as usual.

On One Life to Live, Anna is worried about Larry and wonders why he can't see how Karen is for him.

TV MAILBAG

VET — My brother-in-law and I have a bet going. I say Martin Milner of "Adam 12" was one of the two guys from "Route 66." He says it isn't him. Also, I say he drove a 1966 yellow Corvette. He says it was a '66 Mustang. Plus, what was the story of the show all about? Was it jut about going across country? — Gary Brenton, Tiverton, R.I.

I'd say both you and your brother-in-law need a crash course in TV trivia, although he's further off the mark than you are. First, Martin Milner was one of the characters, George Maharis was the other (later replaced by Glenn Cobett). As to the third character — the car — what's with this insistence on 1966? The highway was Route 66, but the show began in 1960 (a while before the Mustang rolled off Ford's assembly lines). And as for the color being yellow — you must have dreamt that. The show was filmed in black and white, so if it were yellow you wouldn't have known anyway. It was a recent (in 1960) edition white Corvette convertible. Finally, the show's creators thought providing action, adventure and romance was enough. Who needs more of a plot than two guys take a car across country?

COMPLAINT DEPT. — I am protesting one of my soap operas — "Days of Our Lives." We don't like what David is doing to Trish and when are they going to expose Stephanie Woodward as Brooke Hamilton? — Rose Reese, Apache Junction, Ariz.

By the time you read this Stephanie may very well have been exposed as the devious imposter she is. The rest of the cast is getting very suspicious about the uncanny resemblance. As for David and Trish, if he weren't so rotten you wouldn't now have a messy divorce and child custody proceedings to seethe over. After all, isn't that the fun of watching soaps?

MORE SUDS — I've heard that Snapper Foster is leaving the cast of "The Young and the Restless." He's always been my favorite. Is this true? — Maria Deliano, Bloomington, Ind.

Snapper, known in real life as David Hasselhoff, is indeed making quitting like noises. He says he's leaving the show when his contract expires this spring. Whether he does, and whether they write out his character or merely replace him with another actor, remains to be seen. Stay tuned.

V FOR VECTOR — I really enjoy watching "Battlestar Galactica." I think Maria Jenson is really good as Athena. Could you tell me where to write to her? Also, was Jack Haley (the Scarecrow in "The Wizard of Oz") playing the role of Vector in the episode that aired Feb. 25? I would appreciate an answer because my roommate and I hve a bet going. — Donna Stroud, Santa Barbara, Calif.

Write the cast of "Battlestar Gallactica" at Universal Studios, Universal City, CA., care of the show. I hope you told your friend that Jack Haley played Vector and not that the Scarecrow played him. Haley did play the android on the show, but he was the Tinman in "The Wizard of Oz." Tsk-tsk.

DANDY DONNA — I hear Donna Reed is coming back to TV, is this true? Also, who is she married to now? Will the cast of "The Donna Reed Show" get back together like they did with "Father Knows Best"? What are Paul Peterson and Shelley Fabares doing these days, anyway? — Mrs. Ralph McGuire, Kingston, N.C.

Lots of questions there, Mrs. McGuire. First, Reed is starring in NBC's upcoming Ross Hunter film, "The Best Place to Be." Second, she is currently married to Grover Asmus, her second husband. Third, Reed has been trying to get a reunion show together for a few years. The death of Carl Betz threw a monkey wrench into the plans. But she's still working on it. Finally, Peterson lives in the East with his wife and kids. He's a novelist.

Ray Charles performs

SUPER JAM

When jazz musicians get together to jam just for each other, anything goes. When jazz greats get together to jam, the results are often electric, very special and unreproducible. Saturday, March 24, at 10 p.m. on Channel 9, a group of jazz and blues greats will show television audiences what happens when they get together to jam amid the splendor of the Montreux Jazz Festival. Joining the central figure for Ray Charles at Montreux will be a select group of some of Charles' old cronies who just happen to be among the best jazz musicians in the world.

In the peaceful beauty of the Swiss setting, the essential, unadorned Ray Charles will jam with his friends in a two-hour feast for the eyes and ears of the television audience. Joining Charles will be Dizzy Gillespie on the trumpet; Hank Crawford on alto saxophone; David Newman on tenor sax; George Duvivier on bass; Micky Roker on the drums; Kenny Burrell on guitar; and Esther Phillips on the vocal cords.

Timmy's Festival

More than 1,000 handicapped children will become part of the 5th annual Telethon to be held by the B.C. Lions Society for Crippled Children in the McPherson Playhouse Theatre March 24-25.

The theme this year is Timmy's Springtime Festival. The telethon will air on Victoria's Cable 10 for 21 hours starting Saturday at 8 p.m. Last year's Telethon raised $70,000, and this year the society hopes to double this amount.

This year's Telethon will also be seen on cable TV in Saanich Peninsula, Colwood, Langford, Metchosin and Sooke. Broadcasting will begin at the same time as in Victoria (8 p.m.) in all areas except on Saanich Cable, where there will be a two-hour delay with a start at 10 p.m.

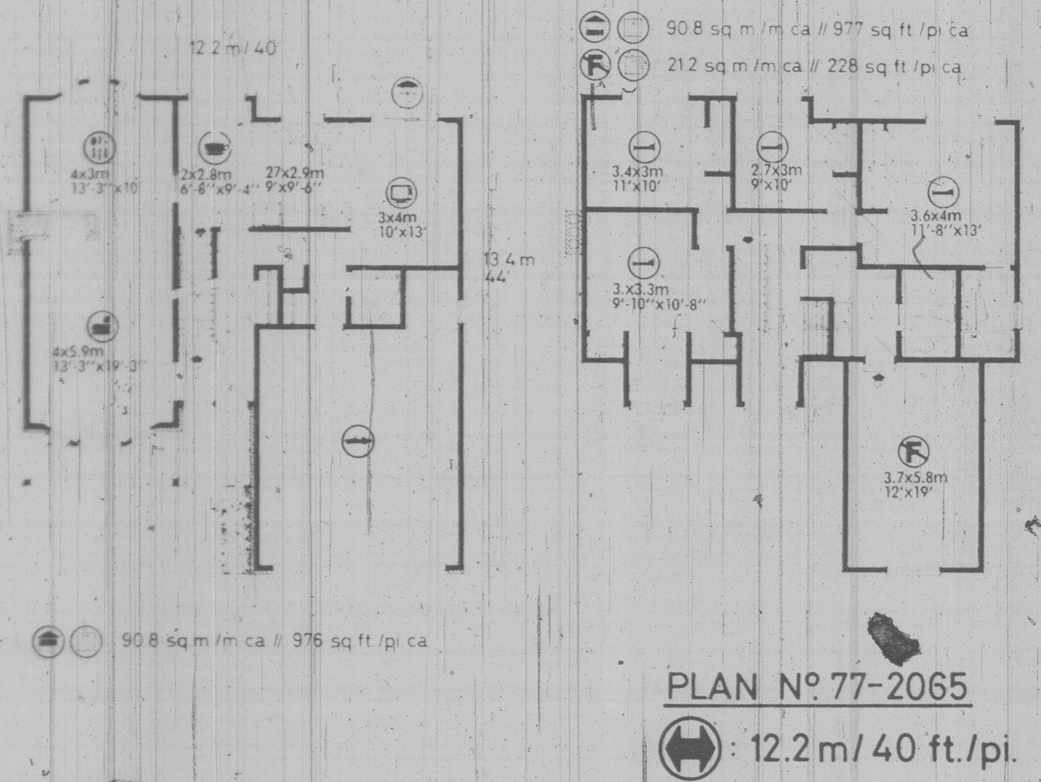
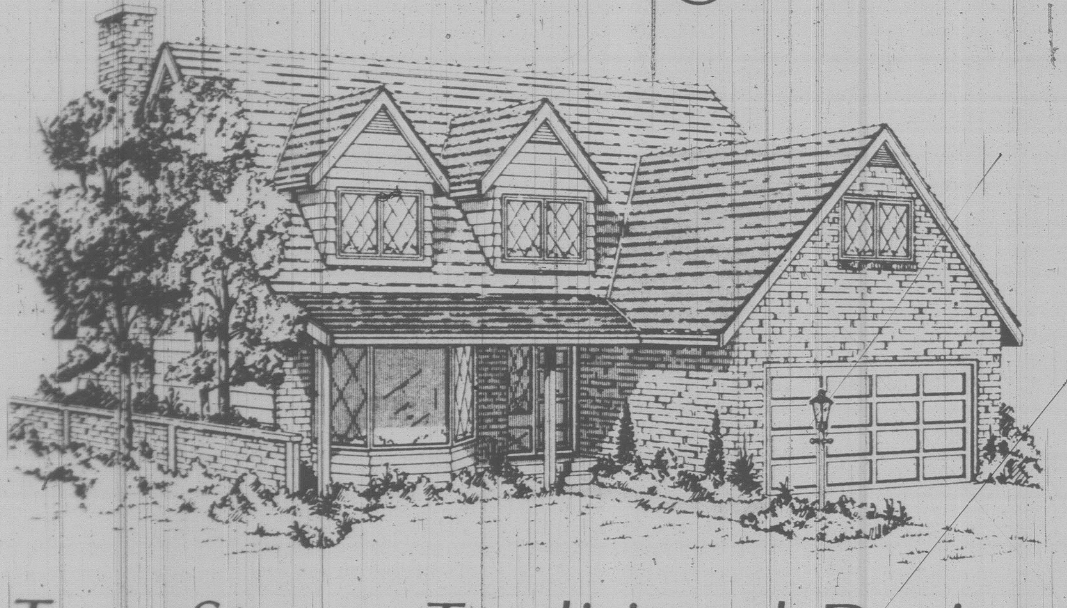
Home of the Week





Two-Storey Traditional Design

This traditional home provides the larger family with many convenience features and abundant space, both at present and for future development.

The brick veneer and horizontal siding of the exterior finish combines well with the bow window, dormer windows and diamond panes to lend an air of the rural English cottage.

A large and open galley-type kitchen separates the breakfast nook and dining room on one side from the large family room on the other. This extremely practical layout enables a good separation of casual and formal dining styles. The family room connects to the patio via sliding doors — encouraging casual outdoor dining in fine weather.

All four bedrooms have good natural light, generous closets, and one has a charming alcove provided by the dormer window. The foyer vanity sink takes the pressure off the central bath, as does the three-piece ensuite with tub in the master bedroom.

A large unfinished area over the garage provides the space required for the future development of a children's playroom or lounge; or a studio or office for the professional or business family.

Plans for design no. 77-2065 may be purchased either by the single set, at a cost of $70 for the first set and $10 for each additional set, or by the package. A five-set plan package, including the first set, is economically priced at $100 and an eight-set package, also including the first set, is only $125.

Whichever method you choose, please include $4 for postage and handling. B.C. residents add 7 per cent sales tax.

John Hearn's Collectibles

Al Learn of Welland was telling me about his collection of door knockers. That's one I had not run into before. At first glance it sounds odd but a moment's consideration shows it to be agood idea.

At one time I lived in a house in Guelph which boasted a door knocker from England reputed to be 400 years old.

Al Learn whose collection is approaching the hundred mark has some finely wrought brass models from the 19th century and cast iron knockers shaped like fish, horses' heads or just elaborately patterned. The beauty of this kind of collectible is that he always has something to look for at the flea markets, junk stores and even wreckers' yards. Like any other collector of the obscure, the hope of something really good turning up around the next corner is always with him.

Price is usually determined by other collectors competing for the same item and I would have assumed that he would have this field pretty much to himself but prices are soaring — not under the pressure of rival collectors but the remodellers of old houses who are always on the lookout for the authentic final touch.

By the way, did you know the origin of the expression 'dead as a door nail'? The door nail is the stud which the knocker knocks. It should be dead!

Mrs. deMacedo of Victoria writes about two books with pictures of poultry drawn from life in 1867. The books are damaged. Some of the pictures are missing but one of them bears the signature of the late Anthony Eden.

This is extremely frustrating. I am sure the books in good condition would have been of great interest to someone somewhere and although there is no reason to believe that Anthony Eden's signature is particularly valuable, it is at least a worthwhile keepsake. I suppose if the Mona Lisa was damaged by fire and only one charred corner of the painting was left it would still be of great value and to some extent the same is true here.

But books are so easy to check. There is not a major town in Canada that does not have at least one fine old book store and antiquarian book dealers are not just merchants, they are connoisseurs who thoroughly enjoy looking at curios of this nature. Check the yellow pages.

After my glowing account of Howard Pain's 'Heritage of Upper Canadian Furniture' a few weeks ago I had several letters from readers reminding me about Elizabeth Ingolfsrud's little books. Apparently I had given the impression that the massive Pain work was the only book extant on the subject. If so, I am glad to repair the misapprehension. Ms. Ingolfsrud is the Ontario furniture consultant at the National Museum of Man in Ottawa and so far she has published five books in her ALL ABOUT series — All About Ontario chairs, tables, chests, beds and now, cupboards. They are all nicely illustrated and extravagantly well researched soft cover books within the reach of any budget and easily available from virtually any good bookstore. Cupboards sell for $5.95. The four earlier books are still available at $3.95 each. The publishers are The House of Grant, Don Mills, Ontario.

When the Angloworms Turn . . .

Two novels today, as different as chalk from cheese. The first is by William Weintraub, the writer, director and documentary film producer whose first novel, Why Rock the Boat? was made into a feature film in 1974.

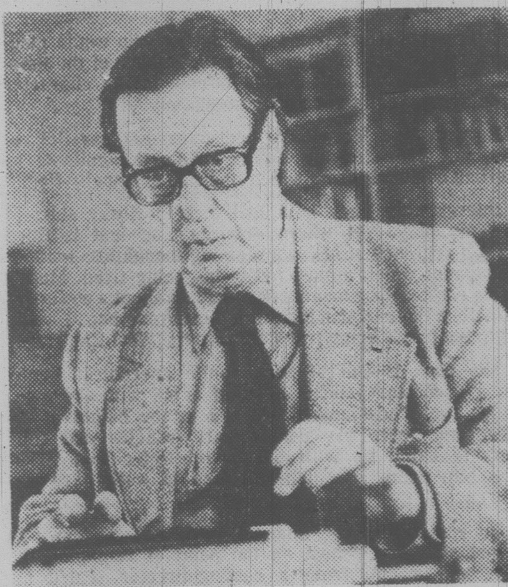
Why Rock the Boat? was a romantic comedy which satirized the Montreal newspaper world of the 1940s. Weintraub's new novel satirizes the current government of Quebec. Titled The Underdogs, it follows the adventures of Paul Pritchard and Mona Rosenstein, two star-crossed young lovers who belong to that most wretched of the world's minorities, the "Anglos" of the Republic of Quebec.

Weintraub's devilish scenario takes place 20 years after Quebec's separation from the rest of Canada. (Quebec proclaimed its sovereignty the day after the Separatists finally won a referendum — on their fourth try. Canada promptly closed its Quebec borders, refused immigration by "Anglo" refugees, and gradually "gave up the ghost and joined the United States," which "grudgingly accepted" it because the U.S. was running out of fresh water.

The plight of the forgotten Anglos is truly desperate. They are reduced to all but the most menial jobs by failure to pass the Linguistic Purity exam (Mona, e.g., made the mistake of pronouncing "fin" while expelling "two cubic centimetres more air through her nose than was permissible"), and unmarried workers are forced to live in decrepit boarding houses where "bathroom time" is limited to four minutes and the menu includes mutton stew, horsemeat and prunes.

Even an Angloworm will turn, however, and at last Paul and Mona are recruited into the Anglo Liberation Army (General Wolfe Cell), only to learn that terrorists, too, have their troubles. (The Quebec construction industry having collapsed, there is no longer any dynamite to steal.)

Next the ALA succeeds in kidnapping a visiting diplomat, the government declares a state of apprehended insurrection and arrests hundreds of people in the middle of the night, and Weintraub rubs in his message that varying cultures could easily get along, if only their governments would stop making trouble.



WEINTRAUB . . . a devilish scenario

The Underdogs does a good job of spoofing the fanatics and putting its "Anglo" readers in French shoes, and it's often ingeniously funny. But it would have been a better book if Weintraub had more to offer as a parting admonition than, "Anglos must always remember to be bilingual."

Random Descent, by Katherine Govier, is an intriguing first novel about a family tree that spans five generations. If you read it, do note — as I did not until well into the story — that the book's endpapers contain a diagram of the Beecham family tree. This should save you needless confusion and tide you over until around page 85, when the story suddenly takes off.

Random Descent is an odd book — half fictionalized research, half story — with a graceful style that's unusual in a first novel. Its messages, such as they are, tell us that it matters who you are, not what you choose; that the medical profession tyrannizes women today as in the past; and that a family's fossilized anecdotes about itself are like junk which has turned to treasure, "because it lasted." All this is scarcely profound, but Ms. Govier's writing ability helps compensate.

Describing the beginning of an affair between a businessman and his super-efficient secretary, for example, she writes: "They had dined at the hotel, sitting through the music because she did not dance, and then gone back to her pale green apartment on Haro Street. She was like glass, hard, and when he breathed she seemed to cloud over with what might have been passion. He realized she expected gratitude for the rescue of the company. But as he'd never noticed he was losing it, he found that emotion hard to locate."

Random Descent contains a well-realized and memorable character in Constance Oliver Beecham, the four-foot, ten-inch self-made woman who dominates her family's story. The novel's coincidences are plausible, its author's humanity never in doubt.

Less assured is Ms. Govier's handling of point of view, which has the reader leaping across several generation gaps per chapter and not always making it. (It takes a practised eye to realize that the "Jennie" of one paragraph is not the "Jennifer" of another, e.g.)

There's also what seems a damaging error of judgment in the final pages, where Ms. Govier compares the Beechams to a flock of ducks parading across a busy street to open water. Anyone who has actually seen such a sight will know that it is a marvel, but in print it is only comic. The Beechams, especially Constance Oliver Beecham, would not have been amused.

Burgess Turns to Cliche In Denigrating Hemingway

By JACK SCOTT

No real admirer of Ernest Hemingway could believe that the writer's private life was of casual or carping interest — it would be somewhat like being a little bit pregnant — but the latest biography of Hemingway seems designed for a public that really doesn't care all that much.

That it is the work of Anthony Burgess, a competent journalist and novelist, seems even more questionable since Burgess adds not a single new insight to that turbulent life or, for that matter, any material that hasn't already been raked and re-raked.

The only remote excuse for this book, indeed, is that it is part of the British publisher's series of writers — Dickens, James Joyce, Shakespeare, Robert Burns, Virginia Woolf and a couple of dozen others — and there's no question that Burgess looked upon it as an assignment in which he has been dutiful enough, but no more.

It was an impossible exercise in any event, since few modern writers have been as exposed to the scrutiny of others.

Anyone who believes that Hemingway ranks among the 10 best novelists of this century, perhaps more important than any of them in his influence for a coming generation, will have read or have in his or her library Professor Carlos Baker's definitive, authorized biography, or A. E. Hotchner's shorter, affectionate book, or the reminiscences of Hemingway's fourth wife, Mary, in How It Was (marred by the use of private correspondence that Ernest decreed was never to see the light of print) or the memoirs of his brother Leicester, Morley Callaghan, Edmund Wilson and a great many other books, good and bad.

It isn't simply that Burgess' work is a re-hash of most of them, but that, like many, he takes a holier-than-thou, condescending attitude to a man who, to put it inelegantly, could write the ass off him any day in the week.

Burgess concedes that Hemingway's literary reputation has not notably diminished since his suicide. But that is a small concession when he argues that Hemingway "was not above imitating himself on his bad days" or that "Hemingway, the man, was as much a creation as his books, and a far inferior creation," surely a viewpoint that's arguable and certainly downright irritating to those who find great power in his novels.

Burgess leans heavily, too, on the cliche that Hemingway had turned himself into a Homeric myth, that he was a poseur and liar, that he was a moody, selfish, suffering, abusive and sometimes vicious. Little or no attempt is made to equate this life style with, say, A Farewell to Arms or The Old Man and the Sea, as tender and beautiful as anything in literature.

There's abundant evidence that Hemingway was a very sick man, both physically and mentally, when, at 62, he took his own life, but Burgess would have us believe that this act was a negation of Hemingway's lifelong philosophy of "grace under pressure", a case of "tormented psyche" and, again, it is the cliche, pat explanation.

In a critical review of Hemingway's Islands In the Sun, not the writer's best novel, but with many magnificent passages, Burgess asks the rhetorical question, "What was wrong with Hemingway? Possibly growing gloom at his failure to be his own myth; more possibly a sexual incapacity which, considering his prowess in other fields of virile action, deeply baffled him. He always boasted of having cojones: but cojones have properly nothing to do with the ability to fire guns.

"There may have been a self-disgust at his inability to live up to his youthful, Joycean ideal of total artistic dedication," Burgess goes on. "He had become a mass of public muscle and, corrupted by the wrong kind of fame, found it too late to retreat ... he could not cope with the stress that most men endure gracefully; he was too godlike to be expected to have to cope."

Such questionable, idle speculation appears more and more in the biographies of Hemingway, and while Burgess gives an otherwise accurate, chronological account of the author's life, his attitude may be seriously questioned.

Where this slim volume can not be faulted is that it presents some 116 illustrations, many of them ancient snapshots that capture the essence of the era. It is to be regretted that Anthony Burgess did not take his cue from them.

The Lives of Two Actors

By ANTHONY JENKINS

The terminal point of a novel has traditionally been marriage or death, whereas a genuine autobiography ends at that crucial point in a person's life which gives meaning and shape to his career.

Dirk Bogarde's first book was just such a journey into the self, tracing events which forced him to build the protective shell which gave him the strength to turn his back on popular success. How much, then, is there left to say in this second volume?

What Bogarde does is to go back over that pattern, filling in the details of his life in the army and on the stage and screen up to Death In Venice. In the first book he explored his sense of himself in terms of his family. The second book examines his rise to stardom and his personal and professional reasons for deciding to break free.

While this book is more conventionally structured than his first, it offers the same intelligence, limpid style and honest self-assessment.

His account of army life is a lesson in the art of survival. Demobbed, he attempts to pick up the stands of his interrupted life and when success on the stage leads to a film contract, he battles (unsuccessfully) to come to terms with sudden wealth. Chastened by the criticism of concerned friends, he constructs a life style with a close circle of friends in quiet, elegant surroundings.

By the Sixties he is threatened by changes in public taste: the bright British comedies are no longer in tune; he cannot break into international stardom and, anyway, his sense of integrity has led to an increasing dissatisfaction with the usual stuff he's offered. Lest he slither to the end of the big snake, he dares to break out against his screen-image; he leaves England and climbs, at least, up the ladder of artistic creativity.

Not surprisingly, Bogarde is uninterested in behind-the-scenes gossip. The famous names he dwells on, like Kay Kendall and Judy Garland, are there because they matter to him as people and, one suspects, because of their fatal vulnerability.

Bogarde again guards his private life while showing us what made him the type of person he is. It is so rare to find an actor who can talk illuminatingly about what he believes in, that one hopes he will, in his next book, analyze his work in those films in which he still takes pride.

Kenneth More's book, while promising to "put it all down in . . . perspective," offers less of the inner man though it tells us more about his day-to-day experiences. The book is really a memoir, as opposed to the shaped autobiography.

It presents an all-round good fellow who would gladly pick up the tab, let others have their share of the limelight and who, while believing utterly in the character he is playing, "can switch off immediately".

Bogarde and More have had somewhat parallel careers, but back-slapping Kenny seems the epitome of suburban bonhomie from which Bogarde eventually fled.

Interestingly, they both had their post-war start in the same play. Yet where Bogarde's account is filled with self-reproach at his own seeming thoughtless manner in rehearsal which almost led to his being fired, More's version centres upon an amusing incident about a power cut just before the performance which everyone hoped would lead to the play's being transferred to the West End stage.

The book is full of such comic anecdotes; Kenny likes a good story and is a bit of a lad with the girls. But he, too, finds himself blocked at the height of his film-career; there are contractual wrangles and time seems to catch up with this jovial Peter Pan. What keeps him going is a determination to work hard and press on.

He remembers the moment when he was down to his last shillings, almost on the point of re-joining the Navy, and a call from a casting-director sealed his choice to be an actor.

That fated sign buoyed him up through later difficulties, when friends shunned him for leaving his second wife for a girl half his age, and when film offers stopped coming. Again, at the bottom of the wheel, his luck was in; the Forsyte Saga rocketed him to even wider fame.

BOGARDE

MORE
. . . 'Peter Pan'

On the credit side, he has no pretensions to be other than he is, a good professional, loyal to his friends, who values the ups in his life because he can still recall the downs, and who blesses the day that he met the woman he loves.

Roger Wilmut's book on Tony Hancock is simply a catalogue of the comedian's professional life. While it chronicles Hancock's failure to overcome his self doubt, that story is a deliberately bald account in so far as it affected the quality of his work.

The book opens with a loving and human tribute from Harry Secombe, and then Wilmut attempts to analyze the comedian's art. He is reduced to telling the story of each script with lengthy quotation. There is little real comment.

Hancock's genius lay in his timing and in his instinctive use of a dead-pan expression; neither of these things can be analyzed in words. Indeed, Wilmut makes clear that part of Hancock's tragedy centred on his inability to explain his success to himself.

There are interesting details about recording techniques and experiments with the size of studio-audiences: the reasons for the comic's break with various partners and script-writers are objectively clarified. The last half of the book contains a complete check-list (dates, cast-lists etc.) of all Hancock's work.

All this may be of interest to a specialized few, though it has little to do with the techniques of comedy. The general reader, interested in the man himself, should read Hancock, the biography by Freddie Hancock and David Nathan.

'A Book About Coming Home'

By JULIAN REID

George Leonard is a marvel.

I must first have encountered his luminously incisive blending of perceptiveness and poetry in the pages of the old Look magazine, where for many years he was a senior editor and staff-writer. But I only became consciously aware of him when I picked up his first formal book, that 1968 best-seller, Education and Ecstasy.

In that fine, eloquent essay, which unlike most of its ilk has dated remarkably little, Leonard sounded the keynote which thrills through all his subsequent writings. "Here," he announced boldly, "is a vision of hope in an age where hope does not come easy, a treatise not only on things as they are, but as they can be and are becoming." And on a later page he encapsulated in a single sentence the guiding credo of the then-youthful Human Potentials Movement: "It is hard to imagine a more revolutionary statement for us than 'The natural condition of the human organism is joy'."

I somehow managed to miss his next book, intriguingly titled The Man & Woman Thing and Other Provocations. But then, in 1972, came The Transformation: A Guide to the Inevitable Changes in Humankind, which still ranks today in my estimation as one of the truly great books of, and for, our time.

What he had to say in it was hardly unique — one could easily assemble a small library of volumes, many of them excellent, all engaged in belaboring the same fundamental thesis. What sets The Transformation apart from the rest is the sheer visionary intensity it generates in the course of its prophetic portrayal of "the radiant and terrible beauty of Humankind transformed." The cumulative effect is arresting, to say the least — almost as if the Biblical Apocalypse had been updated and considerably rewritten by an improbable collaborative committee including Marshall McLuhan, Annie Dillard, Pierre Teilhard de Chardin, William Blake, E. F. Schumacher, and St. Francis of Assissi. Yet it is precisely this passionate multiplexity which invariably characterizes George Leonard's prose at its richest.

This quality is very much in evidence in his new book, The Silent Pulse, which picks up and develops guiding themes from its immediate predecessor, The Ultimate Athlete, and from a memorable sentence tossed off in passing in The Transformation: "Let us say that substance is vibrancy tending toward transformation." For this is, to begin with, a study in elemental vibrancy — or, as the subtitle puts it, "A Search for the Perfect Rhythm That Exists in Each of Us."

Thus, where its predecessors were primarily concerned with hopes and prophecies for the future, The Silent Pulse instead concentrates on the abiding present. It is a book about where we are and who we are already, whether or not we have been graced with the blessing of knowing it. It is also a book about finding ourselves here and now. It is, above all else, a book about coming home.

What Leonard has to teach us, as he himself would be first to admit, is in fact as old as creation — but it is also as fresh as the dewfall every dawn. It is, as the introduction promises, "a journey of discovery involving personal experiences and stories about ordinary and extraordinary people as well as research information." But for many readers it should also fulfill the author's hope that it will turn out to be for some not merely a journey of discovery, but "one of remembrance."

The "research" on which it draws is extensive and solidly scientific. On the basis of various independent findings, Leonard argues most convincingly that "we can draw a startling picture of human nature and human abilities. At the heart of each of us, Whatever our imperfections, there exists a silent pulse of perfect rhythm, a complex of wave forms and resonances which is absolutely individual and unique, and yet which connects us to everything in the universe. The act of getting in touch with this pulse," he adds, "can transform our personal experience and in some way alter the world around us."

LEONARD
. . . passionate prose

As he proceeds to point out, most of us have experienced what he is talking about — in those precious but fleeting moments when we seem all at once "in sync' with everything in the universe," and in that momentous stillness our entire being shines "as clear and resonant as a crystal," and as preternaturally lucid. The Silent Pulse opens the way to normalizing such "abnormal" states of consciousness — "peak experiences," the late Abraham Maslow christened them — so that they can become more and more the rule rather than the exception in the daily round of our lives.

THE SILENT PULSE: A Search for the Perfect Rhythm That Exists in Each of Us, by George Leonard. Clarke, Irwin. $11.50.

E. D. WARD-HARRIS

Birds of Prey: A crackerjack novel
About a sinister real-life tragedy

The Spring catalogues are out, book stores are placing their orders, and soon review copies of some of the new books will be arriving. Just now, there is a lull, as there will be again in mid-summer. In the book business it is always feast or famine, and when it's feast-time one can barely cope. For example, this Spring there will be more than 6,000 new titles published in the United States alone. Add to this total the Canadian and British lists, and translations of books published in non-English-speaking countries, and then double the total to include the Fall offerings, and you have a formidable array of new books — for just one year.

I receive the merest fraction of these, a selection of a selection, but even so it presents a problem as it is clearly impossible to give equal and immediate attention to everything and sometimes the combined pressures of reading, selecting, and having to conform to space limitations means that a worthy book becomes overlooked.

This is what happened to The Birds of Prey, by John Ralston Saul, in the hectic pre-Christmas rush of 1977. However, I can retrieve this particular situation because I have just read the newly-released paperback edition of this book and for the purposes of this review I am going to assume that you, too, missed reading the original hard-bound edition.

That may be rather a large assumption considering the book's success but, to tell the truth, I am enjoying the unfamiliar experience of being a Johnny-come-lately. The rarity of being able to write about a book that is already internationally famous is tantamount to being a modern film critic in an obscure part of Patagonia and having the thrill of discovering Gone With The Wind.

That much is historical fact. However, the official view did not satisfy John Ralston Saul, who was then studying in Paris at L'Ecole du Science Politique. He knew, as every airline pilot familiar with Reunion knows, that in taking off from the sole runway at the sole airport you are bound to hit a mountain unless you steer left out to sea.

Saul reasoned that the only airplane crash ever to have occurred on Reunion was therefore illogical, and the total silence following the unsatisfactory official inquiry was highly suspect. So he got to work. And after seven years of intensive research he reached the conclusion that General Ailleret had been murdered. In The Birds of Prey he presents his evidence through the investigations of fictional journalist Charles Stone.

Stone finds that the crash was variously attributed to an excessive fuel load (for the long leg to Djibouti) or possibly some over-indulgence on the part of some members of the crew who had not expected — and did not wish — to fly that night. But he becomes obsessed with the life and death of General Ailleret and comes to think that something quite different caused the fatal crash. He wants to find out the truth. He says to a French friend: "I want to know who would kill eighteen innocent people in order to execute one he thought was guilty."

The friend replies: "Ah, you have the wrong attitude. They are not criminals. They may be politicians or officers or whatever who work in their own vicious ways but they are playing a very private game . . . The rules are not written because no one would dare to write them, and even the initiated have trouble making the right moves."

SAUL . . . first book a winner

In the game he has embarked on — the expose he is attempting — against the military-political hierarchy of France, Stone soon finds himself in deep trouble. He certainly does not understand the game, but he scents and is determined to hunt the evil in it. Later, the same friend says:

"All you have to do, you think, is find the faction and expose it. Well, that isn't the way France works. Every level hides three more levels, every faction is tied with five or ten other factions, and even in rivalry they will protect each other against an outside threat."

So what we have in Birds of Prey is an unusual novel which offers a sinister explanation of a real-life tragedy; a richly stimulating and thrilling story of intrigue and suspense; a marvellous blend of fact and fiction; the perfection of the genre of the roman a clef.

In the course of Stone's single-handed effort to hunt down and expose the guilty men — from his early faltering steps through the narrowing of the circle to the inevitable gory climax — we are introduced to the murky workings of modern France, a nation by no means recovered from the deep divisions created by the Second World War and its aftermath.

The key to the whole business, the area where fact and fiction become indivisible, is the intense hatred felt by the army for the Gaullists. Initially, de Gaulle's support came from the Resistance workers who the officers who stayed behind during the German occupation of France considered a disorderly rabble. The generals considered de Gaulle himself a usurper, and after he pulled French forces out of Algeria the bitter generals repeatedly tried to assassinate him. That much is common knowledge.

General Ailleret, an obnoxious sort of man, became de Gaulle's chief of staff by default, no other general being trustworthy enough to serve the autocratic president of France. As de Gaulle's choice he was suspect and detested, and the general — according to Stone's (or Saul's) findings — had to be eliminated. How this was achieved, and how Stone found out to his cost, is what this fast-paced, detailed, intelligent political thriller is all about.

When this brilliant book was first published, in France, it created a sensation. The same effect was created in Quebec. In fact, the reverberations are still being felt in French political circles.

When the first English edition appeared, Saul's work was favorably compared to that of John Le Carre at his best and to Frederick Forsyth's Day of the Jackal. I will add to the chorus of praise by saying that the writing is also in the tradition of Graham Greene. In other words, Saul is as good as anyone writing this kind of fiction today, and considerably better than most.

Who is John Ralston Saul? Well, he's a very remarkable young man. For one thing he's a Canadian, and there aren't many Canadian writers of international calibre. Ottawa-born, the fluently bilingual Saul studied at McGill, L'Ecole du Science Politique of Paris, and gained a doctorate from King's College in London, England. Birds of Prey is his first book — a quite extraordinary feat.

But perhaps the most remarkable aspect of this modest man is that despite his fame and riches (the latter safely tucked away in a trust fund) he continues at his nine-to-five job in Calgary. However, should he write another book of the same class as his first effort I would hazard a guess that the chairman of Petro-Canada will be looking for a new executive assistant. And as one who sat up half the night because I couldn't bear to put Birds of Prey down unfinished, I hope this happens very soon.

Fathers Are Still Parents After the Breakup

By WALT KELLYTHORNE

For most divorced American or Canadian fathers, the custody of their children automatically goes to their ex-wives. Confronted by an economic, social and judicial system that assigns them to the status of a secondary parent, and accepting that status themselves, these men thus pay a double price for their divorce.

But that double price need not be paid.

No longer content to lose their children simply because their marriage has ended, some men are slowly and painfully changing the custody status quo; as a result of their efforts their parental role — and, by implication, every man's parental role — may continue to grow and develop despite the decision to divorce.

Lucky are the children with such fathers.

As Mel Roman and William Haddad point out in The Disposable Parent, ". . . those children who fared best after . . . divorce were those who were free to develop loving and full relationships with both parents."

Joint custody of children means that both their parents have an equal voice in determining such things as their health care and education, and that both parents share their time equally. And it means, of course, that both parents — not just the mother — share the whole nexus of the children's lives in ways that simply aren't possible in a strictly maternal (or, more rarely, paternal) custodial arrangement.

Roman and Haddad succinctly detail the problems that men face in obtaining joint custody. The main problem is ignorance. Time after time these authors found studies on family life and parenting that simply failed to include any interviews with, or direct observations of, fathers!

As one respected psychologist wrote, "His value as the economic and emotional support of the mother will be assumed."

Roman and Haddad had to go back to a 1952 study based on interviews with fathers to show us that "they . . . most valued those aspects of parenting that have conventionally associated with the mother."

Joint custody itself is still so rare an arrangement that its full effects on children, fathers and mothers can't fully be measured yet. What studies have been done, and comments from joint-custodial fathers themselves, indicate that it's a set-up which manages to avoid the problems usually associated with single-parent custody.

The loss of a parent through divorce often seems to generate in a child strong feelings of guilt, fear and anger — with all their attendent acting-out behaviors — that simply don't disappear in time.

Roman and Haddad point out, too, that divorced men's present problems in being recognized as legitimate parents of their own children are historically the result of their own and their father's efforts to keep women in "their place."

When industrialism effected its vast changes in family life — men leaving the home to work in factories, women staying there as unpaid domestic labor — motherhood was elevated to an eternal sacred principle that conveniently buttressed the new system's need for workers unencumbered either by domestic duties or competitors.

As Roman and Haddad remark, ". . . maternal instinct came along precisely when it was required, making a virtue out of what seemed to be a necessity."

These authors recognize, then, the restraints the present system of child care — both in marriage and divorce — place on women, and ably demonstrate what a post-divorce joint-custodial arrangement can mean for women too. Thus The Disposable Parent is a book worth reading by women and men. Married or divorced, their attention now could have real effects on their children's futures.

And that's what being a parent is all about, isn't it?

Looking at Stars

By RUTH THOMPSON

Times have changed. One of the warmest reviews for Steve Guttenberg in the new CBS series, "Billy," came from a critic on another network. As a young man with a Walter Mitty compulsion for daydreaming himself into the hero role of three outsized fantasies per program, the critic lebelled Steve as really likable.

Which Steve is. Offscreen, too. For one thing, he's mellower and more vulnerable than reports of his brash ploys to crash casting directors' offices might lead you to conclude.

Sure, he says, he conned his way past the gates by making guards believe he already had a studio job. "I suppose some people would call that pushy. But my parents early taught me to be determined. We're a very close family, and now I can do something for them. A house, later, I hope. But right now, the first thing, I've bought them a vacation trip to Aruba. And I've bought my sisters some really expensive clothes: good jeans, things like that."

And what about a girl friend? The right one is a dream that hasn't materalized yet. "But I sure wish she would," says Steve. Meanwhile, he himself is living frugally in the dorm at UCLA and continuing his dental studies so his folks won't worry about his future. "They're only just beginning to feel OK about 'Our son, the actor.' What they really hoped for was, 'Our son, the oral surgeon.' "

One for the books. "It's a classic, we made history," is how producer Marty Pasetta rated his coup of a fortnight ago in bringing together for the first time as a vocal trio Pearl Bailey, Ella Fitzgerald and Sarah Vaughan in the CBS "Kraft Salute" to Pearl. Pearl adds, "And we didn't need any day's rehearsing. We just got up there and let it happen."

Total freedom at last! That's what master magician Milbourne Christopher says will make his next TV special extra-special. "I'm going to do the whole program my way." Not, he hastens to add, that commercial television hasn't been good to him, too. "But there were a few limitations here and there." Seems an early televised show of Chris' involved the split-second catching of a bullet and was infinitely more dangerous than viewers realized. In fact, his wife Maurine extracted a promise from him not to scare her that much ever again.

The title was nailed down before Lauri Faso was hired as the host. Originally the producers wanted to play it safe with a unisex name. Kim? Sandy? Kelly? Vivian? Then the 5-year-old daughter of one of them, a Marlo Thomas fan, blurted out that the swellest moniker for anybody was "Marlo."

Abe Vigoda could have used that kind of insurance. Unfortunately, to phase him out of "Barney Miller" and into his now defunct "Fish" series, Detective Fish was retired as over-aged.

YOUNG TEDDY (Robert Battles) shares in the joys of first-place honors after a harness race with his colt, Dandy Boy, in Born to Run, an adventure filmed in Australia, on The Wonderful World of Disney, Sunday's March 25 and April 1, at 6 p.m., on Channel 2.

Aging in Victoria

A look at some old people's lives in Victoria will be featured on a documentary Can't Remember — Can't Forget: Old Age, to be aired on Victoria's CHEK Television (Channel 6) Tuesday, March 27, at 9 p.m.

Victoria has twice as many people over 80 as any other place in B.C. The over-65 age group represents 15.4 per cent of its population.

Reporter Marlene Palmer discusses life in a nursing home with its staff and residents, and touches upon issues that are associated with old age: adjustment to new life styles, dealing with loneliness, the acceptance of death, and coping with mental and physical limitations.
